

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. LONDON, JANUARY 15, 1842.

THE present Number of THE JURIST commences the New Series, on the extended plan, of which we gave notice to our readers in a former Number. (Vol. 5, p. 858). In departing in any degree from the plan which we have so long pursued in conducting this Journal, we feel that it is necessary, and due to our readers and ourselves, to state fully the reasons of the change, not only that we may protect ourselves from the imputation of a mere love of change, but that we may satisfy our readers, that, if the cost of perusing THE JURIST shall become henceforth a heavier charge on their worldly estate, there is good ground to anticipate, that they will derive an advantage in the shape of quantity and quality of legal information, equivalent to the increased expenditure.

For some time past, our readers may have observed, that the Reports of THE JURIST have been acquiring an increased importance in the eyes of the Profession. They are very frequently cited at the Bar; they have been not infrequently adverted to from the Bench; and they are now constantly referred to in text books proceeding from the pens of the most eminent writers*. In fact, THE JURIST has become, we may venture to assert, a book of reports of authority. All these indications of increased reputation and utility have convinced the conductors of this Journal, not that they have attained the point at which they may say jam satis, and rest contented with the perfection of their labours, but that they have so fairly and fully entered upon a career of usefulness to the Profession, that it behoves them to press onwards, and seek, by every means in their power, to deserve more eminently its approbation and support.

From the very limited extent hitherto allotted to THE JURIST, it has been found frequently impossible to report all the cases deserving of attention; and if any particular case of great importance occurred in one Court, it became necessary, in order to give that case with the fullness which its importance demanded, to curtail, or sometimes omit wholly, the Reports of Cases in some other Court. If this was so before the creation of the two new Equity Courts, it became necessarily much more so afterwards; and the mere addition of the Reports of Cases in these Courts would alone, if not provided for by some additional arrangements, have been productive of deterioration in the general quality of the Reports.

Within the last few years also, the cases in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have assumed a character of greater general importance and interest than they had formerly. The jurisdiction of that Court has been extended; its sittings have become more regular and frequent; it has enjoyed the advantage of a more regular Bar, and a more permanent and learned Bench; it has, in fine, become so much an integral and visible portion of the judicature of the country, that a Journal of Law Reports can hardly be now held complete, if it does not take cognisance of the proceedings of that tribunal.

Lastly, the conductors of this Journal have been led to believe, that the Members of that branch of the Legal Profession which assists in the administration of justice in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts, have felt great inconvenience from the want of some regular and speedy publication of Reports of the Cases occurring in those Courts; which, as it is well known, have never enjoyed the advantage common to the Courts of Law and Equity, of an unbroken series of Reports.

To include thus the Reports of Cases in at least six additional Courts, in a space already too confined for the cases arising in the Courts of Law and Equity, was manifestly impracticable; and to have attempted it, permanently, would have been to reduce THE JURIST from its present standard of utility to the position of a mere collection of notes, too brief and uncircumstantial to be of any practical use.

On these grounds, therefore, the conductors of THE JURIST have determined on the plan of extending its pages to a sufficient limit to allow: firstly, of reporting the cases, not only in those Courts in which the proceedings have been hitherto reported in it, but also in the additional Courts mentioned; and, secondly, of improving the general quality of the Reports, by putting it in the power of the learned counsel who prepare them, to report more numerous cases in the several Courts; or, when there are cases of particular importance, to report them, if necessary, more fully.

It is the aim, and it is hoped it will be the result of this extension of plan, that the Reports of THE JURIST may attain a degree of accuracy and detail, and, consequently, of practical utility, which will induce its readers not to regret that it has become a somewhat more costly publication.

With regard to the remaining objects of THE JURIST, no change in the matter is contemplated. It will still continue to devote a portion of its pages (and that to about the same extent as hitherto) to General Observations on the State of the Law—on the Progress of Law Reforms—on Bills pending before the Legislature; and such other matters of supposed general interest to the Profession as have hitherto formed the subject of its leading articles. It will also still occasionally contain in its pages Dissertations on Matters of Legal Learning, and Reviews of Publications on the Law.

It is intended, however, to make a change in the arrangement of the Original Articles and General Miscellaneous Information, which will be so printed and paged as to allow of their being entirely detached, leaving the Reports to form, if desired, a distinct volume of themselves. This arrangement is adopted with the double view of preventing the necessity of each annual collection of THE JURIST being formed into one volume of inconvenient size; and of separating that portion of the Journal, which is strictly practical and permanent, from that portion of it which must, necessarily, be only of passing and temporary interest.

We have received from "The Committee of the Birmingham Law Society" the following copy of resolutions passed at their annual meeting on the 23rd of October, with a request that we will exert our influence, "not less on account of the public than of the Profession, to put a stop to the evil referred to."

"That, in the opinion of this meeting, the seller of real estate should bear the whole expense of deducing and verifying the title which he contracts to shew; and that it is the necessary effect of stipulations imposing this expense on the purchaser, that many titles are passed when really bad, and most are subject to a dangerous defect of evidence; and thus, the holders of property are becoming more and more insecure, and Solicitors at once lose, to a great extent, the highest department of business, and, by the sacrifice, incur the most alarming responsibility.

"That it is, therefore, the duty of every Solicitor not only to omit such stipulations in all conditions prepared by him, but to resist every attempt to introduce them at sales by auction.

"It is not, however, intended to interfere with stipulations restricting the title to be shewn in any case, but merely to oblige the seller to prove the title which he undertakes to shew.

"That this resolution be printed, and a copy sent to every solicitor within thirty miles of Birmingham."

We are not acquainted with the constitution or objects of the Birmingham Law Society, but we are very much surprised that any body of Lawyers should have been guilty of a manifesto so absurd and discreditable as this. Do these gentlemen suppose that they, or "all the Solicitors within thirty miles of Birmingham," or even all the Solicitors on the roll, can dictate to sellers and buyers the terms on which they shall deal; or that any such restriction would be beneficial, if it could be enforced? We should have thought, that, in the manufacturing districts at least, the policy of leaving the regulation of commerce entirely in the hands of the parties concerned, would have been better understood; at any rate, that Solicitors would have known that it is their duty to do the utmost that can honestly be done for the interests of their clients—and not to make any compromise for the benefit of third persons, who are quite able to protect themselves.

The proposition of the Birmingham Law Society is, however, obviously false, as far as the interests of the public are concerned; for the effect of throwing the whole expense of deducing and verifying the title upon the seller, is to encourage the purchaser to make all kinds of unreasonable and frivolous requisitions and objections, which he would never dream of insisting on as essential to his security, if part or the whole of the consequential expenses were, according to the modern and salutary practice, thrown upon him. If, to save his pocket, he neglects inquiries which are prudent or necessary, the fault is entirely his own or his agent's, and not at all that of the system.

Edward Cave, who projected the Gentleman's Magazine, never looked out of window, according to Johnson, but with a view to his magazine; and Brindley, the engineer, once avowed his belief, before a Committee of the House of Commons, that Providence, in creating rivers, had solely in view the feeding of navigable canals. So, the gentlemen of the Birmingham Committee seem to imagine that estates are sold and bought solely for their emolument. Indeed, the true source of their tears is avowed by themselves to be the loss to the profession at least as much as the insecurity of the public. "Solicitors," they urge, with the coolest effrontery, "at once lose, to a great extent, the highest department of business, and, by the sacrifice, incur the most alarming responsibility;" in other words, the majority of conditions of sale, at the present day, are vicious, because they do not allow of sufficiently long bills of costs. As to the responsibility, it is a matter of every-day occurrence for a Solicitor to take from his client an express authority to dispense with particular inquiries, &c. We have, perhaps, taken more notice of this circular than it deserves, for we cannot suppose that it will meet with any sanction from the body of the profession.

ON THE AMOUNT OF EVIDENCE REQUISITE TO SUPPORT AN APPLICATION FOR A CRIMINAL INFORMATION.

On two occasions during last Michaelmas Term, Lord Denman, C. J., announced the principle by which the court of Queen's Bench is guided, in deciding upon the sufficiency of the evidence produced in support of an application for a criminal information. (See Ex parte Williams, 5 Jur. 1133, and note thereto). It is this: that the court requires the same amount of evidence which a grand jury ought to require in support of bills of indictment preferred before them. This principle may, to some legal minds, appear too uncertain to be of much practical use, either in determining parties, whether or not they should have recourse to this extraordinary remedy, or even in guiding the court in the exercise of this discretionary power. It possesses, however, the recommendation of professing to limit the jurisdiction of the court within constitutional bounds; and it has the merit of attempting to try the strength of an ex parte accusation by a standard, which is set up throughout the country in the administration of criminal justice; and by which it would be measured, if the ordinary method of indictment were pursued.

It is well known, that, at common law, informations were filed in the court of Queen's Bench, by the Master of the Crown Office, upon the application of any individual, as a matter of course; but that practice being attended with the inconveniences and mischiefs recited in the preamble to the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, "An Act to prevent Malicious Informations in the Court of King's Bench, and for the more easy Reversal of Outlawries in the same Court," it was thereby enacted, that the Clerk of the Crown should not exhibit, receive, or file any information, without the express order of the court publicly given. "That statute," Lord Kenyon observes, in R. v. Jolliffe, (4 T. R. 490), "does not enumerate the grounds which are sufficient to enable the court to grant the information; but the Legislature left it to the discretion of the court, trusting that it would not so far transgress its duty as to go beyond the rules of sound discretion." The court has, however, limited its own jurisdiction in this matter by considerations, which may be referred to four several points: first, the merits of the person applying; secondly, the time of the application; thirdly, the nature of the charge; fourthly, the amount of evidence produced in support of the charge.

The principle above stated governs the considerations arising on the last point: to illustrate and confirm the importance of that principle, is the object of the following citations and remarks. The cases referred to are all cases of application for a criminal information.

In R. v. Haswell, (1 Dougl. 387), where the affidavits of the prosecutor as to the publication of the libel, were contradicted by those of the defendant, Lord Mansfield, on making the rule absolute, said, "Wherever a strong probable ground is laid, the court will grant an information, if the subject matter is fit for that mode of prosecution." In R. v. Jolliffe, (4 T. R. 285, 289), Lord Kenyon said, "We are not now to determine whether or not the defendant be guilty of the offence which is imputed to him, but, merely, whether sufficient matter appears to warrant us in putting the guilt or innocence of the defendant into a constitutional course of trial. Before we send it down to be tried, it is necessary for us to be convinced that the corpus delicti stands established;" and, in p. 290, his Lordship added, "The question is, whether or not there be any legal evidence before the court to affect the defendant with this charge." Ashurst, J., in p. 292, said, "The question is, whether they (the affidavits) contain sufficient matter to satisfy our consciences that the information ought to be granted." In R. v. Willett, (6 T. R. 294), the court took a view of their position, according precisely with the recent judgment. In that case the affidavits, in support of the application, alleged that one Hatherley, who delivered a letter containing a challenge to the party applying to the court, and who was the acting clerk of Willett, the party against whom the application was made, had stated that he was desired by Willett to deliver it; and the court refused a rule, because the affidavit did not contain legal evidence. "They said, that in these cases they were placed in the room of a grand jury; that, if a bill of indictment were preferred before a grand jury, the affidavits or the oaths of these persons, of what Hatherley had said, would not be legal evidence against the defendant; and that this court could only grant an information on evidence that would support a bill of indictment. That, if they were to grant a rule calling on the defendant to shew cause why an information should not be filed against him, it would be calling on him either to give evidence (on the shewing cause) against himself, or leaving the rule to be made absolute on this affidavit alone, which was not legal evidence." In R. v. Younghusband, (4 Nev. & M. 850), which was a case similar in its circumstances, Lord Denman, C. J., said, "We think that the evidence falls short of what we ought to require before we grant a rule for a criminal information." Other cases occur in which the court has refused a rule, on the ground that the evidence was either insufficient to establish the corpus delicti, or defective in connecting the party with the act complained of; but without laying down any general rule, which Buller, J., in R. v. Haswell, (1 Dougl. 389), observed, there ought to be in all such cases of discretionary power. In R. v. Steward and Others, (2 B. & Adol. 12), a rule was made absolute against the defendants for bribery, upon the unsupported but uncontradicted affidavit of a party who had received a bribe. In Ex parte Fentiman, (2 Adol. & Ell. 127; S. C., 4 Nev. & M. 126), which was an application against magistrates, Lord Denman, C. J., said, "The facts stated do not furnish sufficiently cogent proof of corruption to authorize the granting of this rule." In R. v. Baldwin, (8 Adol. & Ell. 163; S. C., 3 Nev. & P. 342), where the affidavit in support of the rule alleged that the defendant was the printer of a newspaper, and that the defendant printed the libel in the said newspaper, a copy of which was annexed; the court held that such prima facie evidence was insufficient. Two cases remain to be mentioned, only for the purpose of expressing a doubt, whether, in the present state of the law on this subject, they can be considered as safe authorities; they are R. v. Sharpe, (Andr. Rep. 384), and R. v. Chappel, (1 Burr. 402).

The importance of the principle promulgated by Lord Denman, C. J., can be duly estimated only by considering the duty of a grand jury in dealing with a bill of indictment according to the evidence produced before them. For that purpose, the tract written by Lord Somers, on occasion of the grand jury of the city of London refusing to act upon the instruction of Pemberton, C. J., and ignoring the bill of indictment preferred against Lord Shaftesbury, A.D. 1681, may be most profitably consulted. But the two following passages are so relevant, that they seem to demand immediate citation:

"There are two vulgar errors concerning the duties of grand jurors, which, if not removed, will, in time, destroy all the benefit we can expect from that institution, by turning them into a mere matter of form, which were designed for so great ends. Many have, of late, thought, and affirmed it for law, that the grand jury is neither to make so strict inquiry into matters before them, nor to look for so clear evidence of the crime, as the petit jury; but that their presentments being to pass a second examination, they ought to indict upon a superficial inquiry and bare probabilities; whereas, should either of these opinions be admitted, the prejudice to the subject would be equal to the total laying aside grand juries; there being, in truth, no difference between arraigning without any presentment from them at all, and their presenting upon slight grounds*." Again,

"It is scarce credible, that any, learned in our laws, should tell a grand jury, that a far less evidence will warrant their indictment, being but an accusation, than the petit jury ought to have for their verdict. Both of them do, in like manner, plainly and positively affirm upon their oaths the truth of the accusation; their verdicts are, indeed, one and the same in substance and sense, though not in words. There is no real difference between affirming in writing, that an indictment of treason is true, as is the practice of grand juries, and saying, that the party tried thereupon is guilty of the treason whereof he is indicted, as is the course of petit juries. They are both upon their oaths; they are equally obligatory unto both; the one, therefore, must expect the same proof for their satisfaction as the other; and as clear evidence must be required for an indictment as for a verdict. It is unreasonable to think that a slighter proof should satisfy the consciences of the greater jury than is requisite to convince the less; and uncharitable to imagine, that these should not be as sensible as the others of the sacred security they have given, by oath, to do nothing in their offices but according to truth*." G. J. P. S.

* "The Security of Englishmen's Lives, or the Trust, Power, and Duty of Grand Juries of England," pp. 83, 84.—Lond. 1766.

THE SERVING BROTHERS OF THE TEMPLE AND THE SERJEANTS AT LAW.

In the sixth year of the reign of Edward III., (A.D. 1333), when the lawyers had just established themselves in the Convent of the Temple, and had ingrafted upon the old stock of Knights Templars their infant Society for the Study of the Practice of the Common Law, the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas were made Knights, being the earliest instance on record of the grant of the honor of knighthood for services purely civil; and the Professors of the Common Law, who had the exclusive privilege of practising in that court, assumed the title or degree of Frères Serjens, or Fratres Servientes; so that Knights and Serving Brethren, similar to those of the ancient order of the Temple, were most curiously revived and introduced into the profession of the law. . . .

The Frères Serjens of the Temple wore linen coifs, and red caps close over them. At the ceremony of their admission into the fraternity, the Master of the Temple placed the coif upon their heads, and threw over their shoulders the white mantle of the Temple; he then caused them to sit down on the ground, and gave them a solemn admonition concerning the duties and responsibilities of their profession. They were warned, that they must enter upon a new life; that they must keep themselves fair and free from stain, like the white garment that had been thrown around them, which was the emblem of purity and innocence; that they must render complete and perfect obedience to their superiors; that they must protect the weak, succour the needy, reverence old men, and do good to the poor.

The Knights and Serjeants of the Common Law, on the other hand, have ever constituted a privileged fraternity, and always address one another by the endearing term brother.

The religious character of the ancient ceremony of admission into this legal brotherhood, which took place in Church, and its striking similarity to the ancient mode of reception into the fraternity of the Temple, are curious and remarkable.

"Capitalis Justitarius," says an ancient MS. account of the creation of Serjeants-at-Law in the reign of Hen. 7, "monstrabat eis plura bona exempla de eorum predecessoris, et tunc posuit les coifes super eorum capitibus, et indubat eos singulariter de capital de skarletto, et sic creati fuerunt servientes ad legem."

In his admonitory exhortation, the Chief Justice displays to them the moral and religious duties of their profession: "Ambulate in vocatione in qua vocati estis . . . Disce cultum Dei, reverentiam superioris, misericordiam pauperi." He tells them the coif is "sicut vestis candida et immaculata," the emblem of purity and virtue; and he commences a portion of his discourse in the scriptural language used by the Popes in the famous bull conceding to the Templars their vast spiritual and temporal privileges: "Omne datum optimum et omne donum perfectum decursum est descendens a patre luminum," &c.

The Frères Serjens of the Temple were strictly enjoined to "eat their bread in silence," and "place a watch upon their mouths;" and the Frères Serjens of the law, we are told, after their admission, did "dyne together with sober countenance and lytel communycacion."

It is believed that Silk Gowns will shortly be conferred on the following Gentlemen:—Messrs. Teed, Purvis, Koe, Kenyon Parker, Wilbraham, Walker, Lowndes, Mathews, Loftus Wigram, James Russell, O. Anderdon, and Roupel.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The following gentlemen have been appointed Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Herman Dirs Mertens, of Margate; Thomas Burgh Dalby, of Ashby de la Zouch, Leicestershire; James Sollory, of Nottingham; and Christopher John Geldard, of Settle, Yorkshire.

CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN PRUSSIA.—There has just been published at Berlin a statistical account of the criminal justice for the last 23 years, in the whole of the kingdom of Prussia, under the German system of legislation—that is, with the exception only of the Rhenish provinces, in which the French code is still in force. From this work it appears, that, during the period mentioned, there have been 312 criminals condemned to death, viz. 234 men and 78 women, making on an average about 13 capital sentences per annum, or 4 in every 3,000,000 inhabitants, the population of this part of Prussia being reckoned at 10,000,000. Of the 312 capital convicts, 145 only were executed, of whom 130 were men and 15 women. Among the 78 women condemned to death, 33 were for infanticide, all of whom were fully pardoned or their sentences commuted.

CHANCERY ACCOUNTS.—Some idea of the magnitude and importance of the operations of the court of Chancery may be formed from the following detail:—According to a statement just completed, it appears that the balance of cash and securities placed to the credit of the various accounts in Chancery amounts to the extraordinary sum of 42,000,000*l.* and upwards. At present the actual number of these accounts is about 12,000; but Parliament has recently determined that all the accounts belonging to the court of Exchequer (amounting to 1,600 or thereabouts) shall be added to them, thus forming an aggregate of 13,600. For facilitating the business incidental to this great mass of accounts' such as the payment of the quarterly dividends, &c., the officers have hitherto been divided into three departments, (arranged according to the letters of the plaintiffs' names), but we believe it is now determined to subdivide these departments into four. Great exertions are being made to carry this into effect; and the new arrangement will, no doubt, contribute much to the expedition of business and the convenience of the suitors, so soon as the labour of closing and bringing forward into new books such a vast number of accounts (for the purpose of subdivision) shall be completed. The offices in Chancery-lane are undergoing material alterations in order to afford accommodation for the carrying on this great increase of business.

LAW.—A MARRIED GENTLEMAN, 28 years of age, who served under Articles in Town and Country, and has been in practice about four years, is desirous of entering into PARTNERSHIP with a Gentleman of respectable and well established Business in Town, who is in need of assistance, and would consider relief from the active and laborious portion of his professional duties, a partial equivalent for the share of business parted with. The most unexceptionable references can be given. Address, E. C., Jurist Office, Chancery Lane.

LAW.—WANTED, A CLERK, competent to undertake the MANAGEMENT of a GENERAL BUSINESS. A gentleman who has served his Articles will not be objected to. No person need apply unless he can give satisfactory references as to integrity, sobriety, and industry. Address, with terms, &c., W. H., Mr. Cavell's, 7, Gray's Inn-place.

LAW.—A GENTLEMAN, recently admitted, is desirous of purchasing a SHARE in the BUSINESS of a RESPECTABLE ATTORNEY, or, till that can be effected, would not object to enter an Office to assist in the General Business, especially the Conveyancing Department; in the latter case, such a Salary only would be required as may be found equivalent to his services. Unexceptionable references will be given. Address, Z. L., No. 2, St. George's-Square, Cheltenham.

Arrangements will soon be made for carefully folding the entire impression before it is published; and, in the meantime, the subscribers are recommended to refold their copies before they cut them.

LONDON, JANUARY 22, 1842.

So many Statutes have been passed upon the subject of Bankruptcy since the Consolidating Act of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16; and so many glosses and further provisions have been supplied to those enactments by the Courts, that this branch of commercial law has become nearly as perplexed as it was in 1825. The subject of protection to parties dealing with traders has, in particular, received several touches at the hands of the Legislature and the Bench, and is now in such a state, that many of our readers will probably not object to a brief notice of the most important points.

We will, in the first place, state the enactments. By the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 88, bonâ fide purchasers for value from a bankrupt, with notice of an act of bankruptcy, are protected, unless the fiat issues within a year. By the 81st section, conveyances by, and contracts and other dealings and transactions by and with, any bankrupt, bonâ fide made and entered into more than two months before the issuing of the commission, and all executions and attachments against the lands or goods of the bankrupt, bonâ fide executed or levied more than two months before the issuing of the commission, were declared valid, notwithstanding a prior act of bankruptcy, if the party so dealing, &c., had no notice of any act of bankruptcy. By the 82nd section, any bonâ fide payment made by or to a bankrupt, without notice of an act of bankruptcy, is made valid against a subsequent fiat, unless it be a fraudulent preference; and the 84th section, in like manner, protects parties delivering goods of the bankrupt without notice. Lastly, by sect. 108, it is enacted, that no creditor having security for his debt, or having attached the goods of the bankrupt, shall receive more than a ratable part of such debt, except in respect of any execution or extent served and levied by seizure upon, or any mortgage of, or lien upon, any part of the property of such bankrupt, before the bankruptcy; provided, that no creditor, though for a valuable consideration, shall avail himself of an execution upon any judgment obtained by default, confession, or nil dicit.

It was held, that an execution on final judgment by default, was within the last cited proviso, as were all executions, except on judgment after verdict, trial by the record, or on demurrer. (Cuming v. Heale, 4 M. & P. 238). Upon this, it was enacted, (1 Will. 4, c. 7, s. 7), that no judgment signed, or execution issued on a cognovit signed, after declaration filed or delivered, or judgment by default, confession, or nil dicit, according to the practice of the Court, in any action commenced adversely and not by collusion for the purpose of fraudulent preference, should be within the 108th section of the Bankrupt Act. This enactment left judgments on warrants of attorney unprotected. (Crossfield v. Stanley, 1 Nev. & M. 668).

The 12th section of Sir E. Sugden's Act (2 & 3 Vict. c. 11) gave validity to all conveyances by any bankrupt, bonâ fide made and executed before the date and issuing of the fiat, to persons without notice of any prior act of bankruptcy; but this particular provision was superseded by the general and important enactment in the 29th chapter of the same session, which, after reciting the 82nd section of the Bankrupt Act, and the 12th section of Sir E. Sugden's Act, enacts, "that all contracts, dealings, and transactions by and with any bankrupt really and bonâ fide made and entered into before the date and issuing of the fiat against him, and all executions and attachments against the lands and tenements, or goods and chattels of such bankrupt, bonâ fide executed or levied before the date and issuing of the fiat, shall be deemed to be valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed, provided the person or persons so dealing with such bankrupt, or at whose suit, or on whose account, such execution or attachment shall have issued, had not, at the time of such contract, dealing, or transaction, or at the time of executing or levying such execution or attachment, notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by him committed; provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed or taken to give validity to any payment made by any bankrupt, being a fraudulent preference of any creditor or creditors of such bankrupt, or to any execution founded on a judgment on a warrant of attorney or cognovit given by any bankrupt by way of such fraudulent preference."

* See Hall v. Wallace, (7 Mee. & W. 353; 5 Jur. 198).

† The time of delivering out the fiat as an operative instrument is "the date and issuing" of the fiat; i. e., primâ facie, the time of delivering it out of the bankrupt office. Pewtre v. Annen, (9 D. P. C. 828).

The 82nd section of the Bankrupt Act, protecting payments without notice, was clearly retrospective; (Terrington v. Hargreaves, 3 Moo. & P. 137); and, in the case of Luckin v. Simpson, (4 Jur. 487, 8 Scott, 676), it was laid down, and in effect decided, that the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, is retrospective, and gives the law to all cases that come for adjudication before the court, although the transaction took place before the passing of the act. There the levy was made on the 16th February, 1839; the fiat issued, and the assignees were appointed on the 23rd; and the act received the royal assent on the 16th July, an issue to try the validity of the fiat then standing for trial. (See Nelstrop v. Scarsbrick, 6 Mee. & W. 684). However, this decision has been overruled; and it is now settled, (with the concurrence of the Judges of the Common Pleas), that, where the assignees have been appointed before the 16th July, 1839, their vested title is not divested by the act. (Edmonds v. Lawley, 6 Mee. & W. 285; Moore v. Phillips, 7 Mee. & W. 536). But, in cases where the passing of the act intervened between the issuing of the fiat and the appointment of the assignees, it seems that the transaction would be protected. (Id.; Nelstrop v. Scarsbrick).

The most important question, however, is, to what extent must an execution proceed before the fiat, to be protected? Although, for the purpose of changing the property of the goods, and overreaching the title of a creditor under a prior writ, or the prerogative title of the Crown, seizure is not sufficient, but the goods must be actually sold; yet, for the purpose of the 81st section of the Bankrupt Act, seizure is a sufficient levying of the execution. (Giles v. Grover, 2 M. & Scott, 207, 241; Godson v. Sanctuary, 1 Nev. & M. 52. See Thomas v. Desanges, 2 B. & Ald. 586; Samuel v. Dick, 3 Mee. & W. 622). But as the ownership is not changed until sale, the creditor is, after seizure and until sale, a creditor holding security within the 108th section; and, if not protected by the 81st section, (or now by the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29), cannot avail himself of his security. (Nolley v. Buck, 8 B. & C. 160; 2 M. & Ry. 68; Morland v. Pellatt, 8 B. & C. 722; 3 M. & Ry. 411). After sale, (though before the return day of the fi. fa.), the 108th section does not apply, even where the judgment was entered up on a warrant of attorney, &c.; for the party suing out execution then ceases to be a creditor. (Wymer v. Kemble, 6 B. & C. 479; 9 D. & R. 511; Higgins v. M'Adam, 3 Y. & J. 1).

Neither the 81st nor the 108th section of the Bankrupt Act is repealed by, or even referred to in, the recent act; but with the exception of the concluding proviso against fraudulent preference, the new enactment is the same as the 81st section of the old act, the date of the fiat only being substituted for two months before such date; and as executions under judgments on warrants of attorney, levied by seizure two months before the fiat, were held to be protected by the 81st section from the 108th, Godson v. Sanctuary, 1 Nev. & M. 52; 4 B. & Adol. 255, it should seem that they would now be protected by the new act, wherever the fiat issues after the seizure, though before sale. The court of Common Pleas has, however, decided, that executions on judgments not obtained on actions commenced adversely, must be perfected by sale before the fiat, (and, it should seem, also before the bankruptcy), to be protected by the new act. (Whitmore v. Robertson, 8 Mee. & W. 463; 5 Jur. 1088). The ground on which this somewhat unexpected decision was founded is simply this, that, as the act gives validity to executions levied before the fiat, "notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy," it merely places them in the same situation as if no act of bankruptcy had occurred; and thus affords a complete protection in case of executions on adverse judgments, which could only have been invalidated by prior acts of bankruptcy. But, as to executions under warrants of attorney, the 108th section defeated them, (unless perfected by sale before bankruptcy), although there were no prior act of bankruptcy; and, therefore, the putting them in the same situation as if there had been no act of bankruptcy, does not exclude the operation of that section. And this reasoning appears to be unanswerable, for the sole object of the enactment was, undoubtedly, to put an end to the relation of the assignees' title to the act of bankruptcy, and not at all to affect any other part of the bankrupt law. But the important result of the decision is, that the case of Godson v. Sanctuary (cited supra) is overruled; and executions under warrants of attorney are taken, not only out of the new act, but also out of the 81st section of the Bankrupt Act; and judgment creditors are liable to be defeated by an act of bankruptcy intervening between seizure and sale, although the fiat may not issue until after the expiration of two months from the seizure. In Whitmore v. Robertson the fiat had issued before sale, but the principle of the decision obviously applies where the sale precedes the fiat, if it follow the act of bankruptcy.

The practical effect of the recent decision will be, to increase the number of adverse actions, and to quicken the proceedings of execution creditors.

COPYHOLD COMMUTATIONS AND ENFRANCHISEMENTS, UNDER THE 4 & 5 VICT. c. 35.

The commutations of manorial rights which the statute embraces, are either, (1) such as, originating in the voluntary agreement of a majority of the persons interested, are compulsory on the minority; or (2) such as are voluntary on the part of all the persons whose interests are immediately affected. For the sake of distinction, therefore, the former kind of commutation may be denominated a compulsory commutation, and the latter, a voluntary commutation.

Either of these kinds of commutation, a compulsory commutation, as well as a voluntary commutation, may extend over a whole manor, or only over part of a manor. For, by the 102nd section of the act, the commissioners, with the consent of the lord of the manor, have the power of dividing a manor into portions for the purpose of a commutation, either voluntary or compulsory. And if all the tenants of a manor can agree with the lord and among themselves upon the terms of commutation, they may effect a voluntary commutation in the same manner as the act enables one or more of the tenants to effect a partial commutation with respect to their own lands; and, in such a case, it will not be necessary for them to have recourse to the more expensive and cumbersome machinery of a compulsory commutation.

Since the mode of proceeding directed by the act differs according as the commutation is compulsory or voluntary, but not necessarily according as it is general or partial, the subject appears to divide itself most conveniently into the consideration of those provisions of the act that relate to compulsory commutations, and those that relate to voluntary commutations.

The commissioners, indeed, in the instructions prefixed to the forms issued by them, distinguish these two kinds of commutations by the names of "manorial commutations" and "partial commutations:" but for the reasons given above, the denominations we have adopted seem the best suited to the division of the subject-matter of the act, and the most conducive to a right understanding of the nature of its provisions.

I. COMPULSORY COMMUTATIONS.—1. Proceedings.

If all the tenants of a manor, (or of a portion of a manor, when divided by the commissioners*), cannot agree with the lord and among themselves upon the terms of a voluntary commutation, the following method of proceeding is authorized by the act for the purpose of effecting a commutation that shall be compulsory on all the parties interested.

Manorial Meeting.—A meeting of the lord and tenants may be called by a notice signed either by the lord, having an interest not less than one-fourth of the annual value of the manor, or by ten of the tenants; or, if there be not so many, by half the tenants of the manor: such notice to be published and advertised as directed by the 13th section. At the meeting a chairman is to be elected by the lord and tenants, (the vote of the lord being reckoned as equal to one-third of the whole number of votes, and the votes of the tenants being reckoned individually), and the chairman is to proceed to ascertain the number and interest of the lord and tenants present, computing the interests of the tenants in the manner provided by the 17th section; and if the interest of the lord who is present appears to amount to three-fourths of the value of the manor, and the tenants present are not less than three-fourths of the whole in number and interest, they may proceed to enter into and execute an agreement for commutation. If it should appear that the persons present are not sufficient in number and interest, or a sufficient portion are not willing to enter into an agreement, any number of the persons may, nevertheless, execute a provisional agreement, which, if executed within six months by a sufficient proportion of parties, will be equally effectual as if sufficiently executed at the meeting. (Sect. 16). The meeting may be adjourned by the desire of the majority of the persons present, due notice of the adjourned meeting being given according to sect. 18.

The Agreement.—The agreement is to be in such form as the commissioners shall direct; and they have already issued a form for the purpose. It is to bear date on the day on which the first signature is attached to it, (sect. 19), which must be done at the original meeting, or a regularly adjourned meeting.

Parties to the Agreement.—It must be signed by the parties already mentioned, as required for its validity, viz. not less than three-fourths in number of the tenants, and the lord and tenants whose interests in the manor and lands amount to not less than three-fourths of their respective value, (sect. 13); computing the interests of the tenants in the manner directed by sect. 17, which provides, that the interest of no person shall be computed who has not been admitted, or who has made an absolute surrender of his copyhold; and enables the commissioners, in certain cases, to make special rules for the computation of interests: and in case of dispute as to the sufficiency of interest of parties, the decision of the commissioners is to be conclusive. (Sect. 14).

In the case of an ecclesiastical or other corporation, or the patron of a living, being interested in the manor or any of the lands to the extent of one-third of their annual value, the consent of such parties will be necessary to the validity of the agreement. (Sect. 22).

If any party interested be under a disability, or abroad, the 11th section substitutes the guardian, trustee, committee of the estate, husband, or attorney, in the place of such person, for the purposes of the act. And sect. 12 enables the lord or any of the tenants of the manor to appoint, by power of attorney, an agent to attend the meetings, and enter into and sign the agreement, and do all other acts for them under the provisions of the act.

Terms of the Agreement.—The agreement will express whether the commutation is to be for a rent-charge, and small fine not exceeding 5s., or for a fine on death or alienation, or at some fixed period. If the former is agreed to be the consideration of the commutation, the agreement may either fix the amount of the entire rent-charge payable to the lord, or provide that its amount shall be fixed by the valuers, subject to the approbation of the commissioners; and if the amount be stated, it may either determine the apportionment for each tenant, or provide that the apportionment shall be made by the valuers, with the like approbation; or separate rent-charges may be agreed upon between the lord and any one or more tenants, parties to the agreement; or the agreement may provide, that the entire rent-charge therein stated shall be subject to increase or diminution by the valuers to a specified amount per cent., or that such separate rent-charges shall be subject to increase or diminution to a given amount per cent. in certain specified events. The agreement may also provide, that so much of the rent-charge apportioned in respect of the lands of any tenant, who is a party to the agreement, as shall be in lieu of fines, &c., to which such tenant would not be liable thereafter during his tenancy, shall not commence till the time of the next act or event on which such fine &c. would have become due. (Sect. 14).

If the commutation is for a fine on death or alienation, or at some fixed period, the agreement is either to fix the amount of the fine, or provide that it shall be subject to increase or diminution by the valuers to a specified amount per cent. If the fine is to be payable at a fixed period, the agreement will specify that period. (Sect. 15).

The commutation will extend to rents, reliefs, and services, (except service at the lord's court), and also to fines, heriots, and payments in lieu of heriots, and the lord's rights in timber, without any express mention of them in the agreement. But, if it is also intended to commute the lord's rights in mines, they must be expressly included in the agreement. (Sect. 13). If the lord's rights in mines are reserved to him, rights of way for mining purposes may be granted to the lord, by a statement to that effect in the agreement. (Sect. 84). Any other right cannot be made the subject of a compulsory commutation. (Sect. 82).

The agreement may likewise fix a scale of fees to be payable to the steward after the commutation, but so as not to affect the interests of any steward now in office, who holds his office for life or during good behaviour, or according to the usage has, in the opinion of the commissioners, a just expectation of so holding it. (Sect. 14).

The agreement may also provide for the costs of the proceedings, subject to the approbation of the commissioners; and may contain all other provisions necessary for carrying the commutation into effect, so that they do not interfere with the powers given by the act (sect. 28) for apportioning the rent-charge according to the particular circumstances of each tenement, and for the relief of tenants for life, and other persons having limited interests. (Sect. 14).

Confirmation of the Agreement.—As soon as the agreement has been executed by the requisite parties, it is to be sent to the commissioners, who are to institute an inquiry for the purpose of satisfying themselves that it ought to be confirmed; and if they are satisfied that it ought to be confirmed, the commissioners are to confirm the agreement by signing and sealing it, adding the date of the confirmation, and are to publish the fact and date of the confirmation within the manor. (Sect. 23).

Until the agreement is thus confirmed it is in no wise binding. The commissioners are consequently invested with a veto on every agreement. It will, therefore, be advisable for the parties to communicate unreservedly with the commissioners, for the purpose of insuring their concurrence, before much expense is incurred in the preliminary proceedings.

* The word "manor," whenever used hereafter, is to be understood as extending to such a portion of a manor.

After the agreement is thus confirmed, it will be binding, not merely on the parties who have signed it, but on all persons interested in the manor and lands included in the commutation, nor will be liable to be invalidated by any question as to the sufficiency of the number or interest of the parties. (Sect. 23).

Appointment of Valuers.—The statute (sect. 24) directs the appointment of valuers, who are to make the valuations, apportionments, and schedules required for carrying the agreement into effect. The valuers may be appointed at the original meeting, or at some adjourned meeting, either before or after the confirmation of the agreement; but the appointment will not be valid, unless the agreement has been or shall be executed by the sufficient parties. If the amount of the rent-charge is fixed by the agreement, the valuers are to be appointed by the tenants in the mode prescribed by the 24th section. But if the amount of the rent-charge is subject to increase or diminution by the valuers, or be left to be determined by them, they are to be appointed, half of them by the lord, and the other half by the tenants. It is observed by Mr. White, in his useful edition of the act, that "there does not appear to be any special provision for appointing valuers, in cases where the consideration for the commutation is a fine alone, under the 15th section; nor do any duties seem to be assigned to them in this respect, except as to the determination of the amount of increase or diminution of the fine, when left to them. But, as the commissioners are required to set out the amount of such fines in their schedule of apportionment, the costs of necessary proceedings for carrying out the provisions of the 15th clause would either be matter of separate agreement between the parties and the valuers, or remain for adjustment by the commissioners, under the 44th clause."

When an even number of valuers are appointed, the commissioners may appoint an umpire between them. (Sect. 25). And if, after six months from the confirmation of the agreement, no valuers shall have been appointed, or their valuations, &c., shall not have been made, or in case of the death or incapacity of a valuer appointed, the commissioners are empowered to appoint valuers. (Sect. 38).

Powers and Duties of Valuers.—The valuers cannot act till they have made and subscribed the declaration prescribed by the 26th section. And after the confirmation of the agreement, but before they enter upon the performance of their duties, they are to apply to the commissioners for instructions. (Sect. 25). When they have received their instructions, they are to proceed to make such valuations, &c., as the commissioners shall require, for which purpose the valuers are empowered, on producing an authority from the commissioners or an assistant commissioner, to enter into and inspect any of the lands included in the commutation; and to require the steward of the manor to furnish a statement in writing, in the form directed by the commissioners, of the particulars relative to the manor, described in sect. 27.

Valuations and Apportionments.—After these preliminary investigations, the valuers are to proceed to determine the increase or diminution, within the prescribed limit, of the rent-charge or fine, or to fix the amount of the rent-charge, where, by the terms of the agreement, those matters are left to their determination; and then to apportion the rent-charge amongst the several tenants, where the apportionment is not made by the agreement itself; and in so doing, the valuers are to take into consideration, and make due allowances for the particular circumstances of the land included in the commutation, and of the several tenements, so far as they may, consistently with the terms of the agreement and the instructions of the commissioners. (Sect. 28).

The valuers are also to state the amount of the fine, not exceeding 5s., to be payable in respect of each tenement; and, if so instructed by the commissioners, they are to make an apportionment of the costs of the proceedings, subject to the approbation of the commissioners. (Sect. 28).

The valuers are to send their valuations, &c., when completed, to the commissioners, who are to cause a copy of them to be deposited in the hands of the steward, and notice to be given of their being so deposited, for the inspection, without fee, of the persons interested; and in the same notice, a place and time, not earlier than twenty-one days after, is to be appointed for holding a meeting for hearing and determining objections to the valuation. (Sect. 29).

Notices of objection, by the lord are to be given to the commissioners, at their office, and by any other party, to the steward, at the place of deposit; but, unless upon cause shewn to the satisfaction of the commissioners, they must be given at least ten days before the day of meeting. Forms of such notices will be supplied by the commissioners, through the steward, who is to annex the notices to the copies of the valuations, and make a note of the objection on the copy to which it relates, and allow inspection of such notices. (S. 29).

Before the meeting, the steward is to deliver the copies and notices to the commissioners, or the assistant commissioner deputed to hold the meeting, who is, at such meeting, authorized to hear and determine the objections, and adjourn the hearing, if necessary, and direct further valuations, &c., to be made. (Sect. 29).

When the objections have been heard and determined, the schedules are to be amended accordingly; and, at any time before the final settlement of the apportionment, the commissioners are empowered to make such amendments in the schedules as shall be rendered necessary by events that have happened, or the lapse of time in the interval. (Sect. 29).

The commissioners are empowered to hear and determine suits and differences respecting manorial rights, (except rights to mines), twenty days' notice of the intention so to proceed being given to the parties interested, and on whom their decision shall be binding, (sect. 39), subject to an appeal to a court of law by feigned issue, or on a case stated, in any case where the yearly value in question exceeds 20l. (Sect. 40). The commissioners are also clothed with ample powers for requiring the attendance of witnesses, examining them on oath, and calling for the production of papers and other documents. (Sect. 43).

Schedule of Apportionment.—After the valuations and apportionments of the valuers have undergone this examination and correction, the commissioners are to proceed to frame from them their own "schedule of apportionment." (Sect. 31). In this document, which forms the final adjustment of the commutation, are required to be inserted the following particulars:—

1. The name, description, and quantity of the lands included in the commutation.
2. The names and description of the proprietors.
3. The names and descriptions of the occupiers.
4. The amount of the rent-charges apportioned on the several lands, and the periods when they are payable, and the nominal fine reserved in respect of each tenement; or the amount of the fine on death or alienation, where that is the form of the consideration for the commutation.
5. The person to whom, and under what title, the payments are to be made.
6. Other orders and directions for carrying the commutation into effect, which will include directions for deferring the commencement of the rent-charges, or for their increase or diminution in certain events set forth in the schedule. (Sect. 37).

As soon as the schedule of apportionment is made, a copy of it is to be deposited with the steward in a place in or near the manor, when it will remain for inspection by parties interested, for such a length of time as the commissioners shall direct. During this time notices of errors in the schedule may be sent to the steward; and, at the end of the time, he is to return it to the commissioners, together with such notices as he shall have received, and a statement of any errors he may have discovered. The commissioners are then to inquire into the alleged errors and rectify them, if necessary. (Sect. 32).

Before the commissioners proceed to ratify a commutation, and in any stage of the proceedings between the signing of the agreement and the final confirmation of the schedule of apportionment, the commissioners may require notice to be given to persons interested in remainder, reversion, and expectancy, and hear and determine objections to the terms of the commutation on the part of such persons. (Sect. 34).

The schedule, being now considered complete, is to be engrossed, and the commissioners are to annex to it any documents or maps requisite for its elucidation. They will then confirm the schedule of apportionment, by signing and sealing it, and adding the date of the confirmation. (Sect. 32).

The commutation is thus brought to a conclusion. But even after the confirmation, the commissioners have still the power of correcting any manifest error in it, with the consent of all parties whose interests are affected. (Sect. 35).

Two copies of the confirmed schedule of apportionment and documents annexed, are to be made under the seal of the commissioners; and one copy deposited and kept with the court rolls of the manor, and the other in the hands of the clerk of the peace: and notification of their being so deposited is to be given by advertisement, or otherwise, as the commissioners shall direct. (S. 35).

The repeated inquiries and deliberate investigation for which the preceding process so well provides, is calculated to insure, that no party, whose interests may be affected, shall be taken by surprise, or be deprived of the opportunity of canvassing the terms of the commutation; that due regard shall be paid to existing rights and expectant interests, and that the peculiar circumstances of each individual case be carefully and attentively considered. But it may be possible, in many cases, even where the commutation extends over a whole manor, to save much of the expense, time, and trouble required to complete this mode of commutation. If, indeed, not more than three-fourths of the tenants in number and value can agree upon the terms of the commutation, the course of proceeding originating in a manorial meeting, and passing through the steps above described, affords the only means of accomplishing the business. But, if all the tenants of a manor are unanimous, the transaction will then assume the form of a voluntary commutation, which requires no previous meeting to give it validity. And, as suggested by the commissioners in their instructions, if, in such a case, all the tenants, having settled with the lord the entire consideration to be given to him, can arrange among themselves, or can trust a valuer to fix for them, the portions to be contributed by each, they may embody the distribution of the gross sum in a schedule of apportionment that may be annexed to and form part of their agreement; and it will be unnecessary to go through all the processes of investigation provided for apportionments, in the case of manorial (or compulsory) commutations.

LONDON, JANUARY 29, 1842.

It is well known to be now a settled doctrine, that, as between incumbrancers or purchasers of an equitable interest in personalty, priority belongs to that one who first gives notice to the person in whom the legal title is vested; thus, if A., being entitled as cestui que trust to a life interest in a personal fund, mortgages or sells his interest to B., who gives no notice to the trustees, and afterwards mortgages or sells it to C., without notice of B.'s charge, and C. does give notice to the trustees, C. will have priority over B. (Dearle v. Hall, 3 Russ. 1; Loveridge v. Cooper, 3 Russ. 30, and several later decisions).

But in Jones v. Jones, (8 Sim. 683), it was decided, that the doctrine in Dearle v. Hall has no application to the case of several mortgagees of real estate; and that, if there be a mortgage of real estate to A., then a second to B., who gives no notice of his mortgage to A., and a third to C., who does give notice of his mortgage to A., C. shall not be preferred to the second mortgagee*.

We have understood, that this decision has been doubted by some eminent conveyancers; and that opposite opinions on the point have been given. It is said, that the principle of the decisions is as applicable to cases of realty as of personalty; that, as between merely equitable incumbrancers, he who obtains the nearest approach to a claim on the legal estate—he who takes the most pains to prevent a fraud being practised on subsequent incumbrancers, has a better equity than one prior in point of time, who has not taken any such precautions; and that there is no distinction between the title to land and the title to personalty, which has the effect of destroying the application of this equitable doctrine to realty.

* In Jones v. Jones, as the facts are stated, the mortgagor had an equitable estate only in part of the premises, and had the legal estate in respect of other part. Whether this circumstance affects the decision, may deserve consideration.

We believe, Jones v. Jones is the first and only case in which the point in question has been directly determined. But it appears to us, that the distinction taken in it is not only in accordance with the earlier indirect authorities and dicta, (Beckett v. Cordley, 1 Bro. C. C. 353; Ex parte Cawthorne, 1 Gl. & J. 240; Martinez v. Cooper, 2 Russ. 214), which lay down as a general proposition, that, as between equitable incumbrancers on real estate, priority in point of time alone gives priority in equity, and that, to rebut that equity, there must be something like fraud;—but that it is warranted by the very cases which are supposed to be in hostility to it.

It is to be observed, that the decisions in Dearle v. Hall, and Loveridge v. Cooper, do not affect to proceed on the ground of an equity in the subsequent incumbrancer, arising out of his prevention of fraud upon subsequent purchasers, but on the ground of his having done more to perfect his title. "The plaintiffs say," says Sir J. Leach in Dearle v. Hall, "that they were not bound to give notice to the trustees; for that, notice does not form part of the necessary conveyance of an equitable interest. I admit, that, if you mean to rely on the contract with the individual, you do not need to give notice: from the moment of the contract he, with whom you are dealing, is personally bound; but, if you mean to go farther, and to make your right attach upon the thing which is the subject of the contract, it is necessary to give notice; and, unless notice is given, you do not do that which is essential in all cases of transfer of personal property."—And citing a case of Ryall v. Rowley, (1 Ves. sen. 348), in which the Judges held, that, in the case of a chose in action, you must do every thing towards having possession that the subject admits, his Honor went on to lay down, that, as regards an equitable interest in personalty, notice is necessary to perfect the title—to give a complete right in rem, and not merely a right as against him who conveys his interest.

And in Loveridge v. Cooper, on appeal before Lord Lyndhurst, C., the observation of his Lordship was, that, "in cases like the present, (that is, cases of equitable interests in personalty), the act of giving the trustee notice is, in a certain degree, taking possession of the fund: it is going as far towards equitable ownership as it is possible to go; for, after notice given, the trustee of the fund becomes a trustee for the assignee, who gives him notice."

The principle, then, of these decisions, proceeds on the ground, that, as possession in respect of personality determines the apparent ownership, and as notice to the legal owner is the nearest, and indeed, only approximation which the equitable incumbrancer can make towards possession, such notice shall have the effect of giving him a quasi possession. And it goes no farther than this, that notice to the legal owner is a necessary act in the purchaser of the equitable interest, where such notice has the effect of adding something to his title.

But if these cases are to be applied to mortgages of real estate, the question is, what is the effect of notice on the title? Is giving notice doing every thing towards obtaining the legal title that the subject admits? Has it, in fact, any effect whatever upon the title? That it has none, is decided, as it appears to us, by the case of Peacock v. Burt, (13 Law Journ. 35), referred to by his Honor the Vice-Chancellor in Jones v. Jones. There, the second mortgagee of real estate had given notice of his mortgage to the first mortgagee; and the third (without notice) paid off the first, and took a conveyance of the legal estate from him; and the Master of the Rolls held, that the third mortgagee should have priority over the second. In other words, that the notice given by the second was valueless. That his Honor treated the notice in that light, appears from what fell from him in his judgment. "It is clear, in fact," said his Honor, "that, to give a third mortgagee, who has obtained the legal estate, a priority over the second, nothing further is necessary than to have advanced his money without notice of the second mortgage; and this priority may be obtained, even during the pendency of a suit; for the equities of the two parties being equal, this court refuses to interfere; not because one has a better, but because they have equal rights:" an expression clearly inconsistent with the supposition that notice had any effect on the title; for, if it had, then the two mortgagees would not have had equal rights.

There is another point of view in which the question may be considered, to shew that in the case of mortgage of real estate, notice has no effect upon the title; and that is, that it will not prevent the first mortgagee, not only from being at liberty, but from being bound to re-convey and return the title deeds to the mortgagor; for it has been decided, that, if there be first and second mortgagees, and the second has given notice of his incumbrance to the first, yet, if the mortgagor tenders payment to the first mortgagee, he can demand the delivery of the title deeds. Dixon v. Wigram, (2 C. & J. 613). That case was an application under the 7 Geo. 2, c. 20, for stay of proceedings by a first mortgagee, and to compel re-conveyance and delivery of the title deeds, on the mortgagor bringing the mortgage money and interest into court. And for the mortgagee, one of the grounds of opposition was, that he had received notice from a second mortgagee of his incumbrance; but the court held, that the first mortgagee must re-convey and deliver up the title deeds, as the second would be in no danger, because several modes might be adopted for his protection against a subsequent incumbrancer. This case proves that the notice does not give to the second mortgagee any claim or right whatever over the legal estate. In other words, it leaves his title exactly as it was before; whereas, in the cases referred to upon equitable estates in personality, the very essence of the decision is, that the notice converts the trustee of the fund into a trustee for the assignee who gives him notice; and it seems to follow, that it would be a breach of trust in the trustee to hand over the fund to the mortgagor, unless with the acquiescence or direction of the mortgagee giving notice.

ON SPECIAL CONDITIONS OF SALE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE JURIST.

Sir,—So far as my information enables me to judge, I should have thought that it had been agreed alike by conveyancing counsel, and by the higher class of solicitors, that Conditions of Sale, restrictive of the ordinary rights of purchasers, have, of late years, been carried to an unreasonable and mischievous extent. I was, therefore, surprised by the tone of the remarks in THE JURIST, of the 15th instant, upon a late resolution of the Committee of the Birmingham Law Society. Those resolutions may not state the case very happily, or base the opposition of the committee upon good grounds, but they point plainly enough at an existing evil, and have a tendency to abate it; and, at all events, may be made a text for useful comment. Since a good title, sufficiently proved, does not require the aid of special conditions, it would seem to be sufficiently obvious, that every restrictive condition is, pro tanto, the admission of a defect, and, therefore, objectionable on the part of the vendor as well as of the purchaser; yet it is notoriously now common for solicitors (more particularly in the country) to offer all property, indiscriminately, for sale by auction, under conditions extremely prejudicial to a purchaser, and, in numerous cases, not called for by the circumstances of the titles; and surely they do not then do the utmost that can honestly be done for the interest of their clients. Such conditions daily injure opposite parties: first, the vendors, by repelling trustees, and such persons as are cautious enough to consult their professional advisers before purchasing at an auction; and next, the numerous purchasers, who reasonably assuming that they are to have a sufficient title, make their purchases upon a fair estimate of value, without deduction for extraordinary expenses to which they may be subjected, or for the risk of a bad title. In the most favourable case, the vendor and purchaser do not stand upon even ground, when special conditions are resorted to; for the vendor knows exactly the way in which they will operate, while the purchaser is necessarily ignorant of this; and, if conscious of his risk, must insure against it by a reduction in the price which he would otherwise give. Not only honesty, but a vendor's interest, therefore, requires that a purchaser should be pretty distinctly apprised of the risk which he must bear, and of the extraordinary expense which he may be put to; in other words, special conditions, to be really beneficial, should be always framed with reference to the particular title in question, and should inform the purchaser of its general state. Thus qualified, such conditions afford all the protection that can fairly be desired by a vendor, and will really benefit him; while they cease to be objectionable on the part of the purchaser. And conditions thus framed would probably meet the views of the Birmingham Committee, who, I would fain hope, were not actuated by merely selfish motives in framing their resolution.

The objection to unnecessary Conditions of Sale is increased by the existing doubt, whether their adoption by trustees for sale, (including of course mortgagees, with a power of sale), is not such a breach of trust as renders a contract for sale under them void in equity. And it may not be useless to your country readers to add, (what you are, doubtless, aware of), that several of the most distinguished conveyancing counsel act upon this doubt, so far as to reject at once titles submitted to them by purchasers under such contracts. I am, &c.

A CONVEYANCER OF FIFTEEN YEARS' STANDING.
London, 19th January, 1842.

Our correspondent has discussed this question as it ought to be discussed, with reference to the interests and convenience of vendors and purchasers, and not with reference to whether the business of lawyers would be greater or less by the adoption of a different practice. We do not, however, alter our opinion as to the expediency of leaving the class of buyers and sellers of estates to manage their own affairs according to their own discretion, just like any other class of buyers and sellers. There can be no doubt, as our correspondent suggests, that every restrictive condition of sale is an admission of a defect pro tanto; that is, of either a defect of title, or a difficulty in procuring evidence on particular points. Nor can there be much doubt, that the result is to diminish to some extent the price that the buyer gives. The compact between the buyer and seller is, in effect, this: that the seller finds it convenient not to be called upon to establish by proof every point of title, which, in the absence of special compact, the purchaser would be entitled to call for; and the purchaser, as our correspondent observes, insures against his "risk" by giving less money. Where is the evil of such a compact? and what is it, in effect, but an agreement between parties, in dealing together, to submit to the evil of, respectively, waiving some advantages, for the purpose of avoiding that which, in their calculation, would be a greater evil, viz. a suit for specific performance. Whether such a calculation be correct or not, we do not pretend to judge; we are content to suppose, that, as a body, the sellers and purchasers of land, like the sellers and purchasers of cotton or iron, or of any other commodity, know their own interests best; and we hold, that the functions of the lawyer are not to advise traders as to what are their true interests as traders, but to advise them how, legally, to carry into effect those arrangements, which they, in their own judgment, think most for their interest. We perfectly agree with our correspondent, that much mischief may arise from the adoption, by solicitors, of a general form for conditions of sale; and that special conditions of sale should always be framed with reference to the particular title. But to forward this object, the resolution of the Birmingham Committee needed not to have been quite so ambitious as it was. A resolution, that it is the duty of solicitors to apply great skill and care in the preparation of special conditions of sale, would have been sufficient; and though we do not see, that, for the promulgation of so simple a truth, it was necessary to call into action the powerful machinery of a Law Institution, and the deliberations of a committee, yet, if the members of the Birmingham Committee had confined themselves to some such novel doctrine, their labours would at least have escaped censure, if they had not deserved commendation.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE WILL ACT.

In the courts of common law, where the validity of a will only comes in question incidentally on trials of the title to real property, or on the occasion of an issue devisavit vel non, the Statute for the Amendment of the Laws with respect to Wills does not appear from the reports to have yet become the subject of judicial interpretation. But the Ecclesiastical Courts, engaged in the constant examination of a multiplicity of wills, many of them of the most informal and irregular description, have, necessarily, been led to the consideration of the provisions of that statute; and, in those courts, as might be expected, we find cases on the construction of the Will Act occurring in great number and variety. Some of the decisions of the Courts of Probate on these cases differ from the opinions expressed in other departments of the law, in the course of private practice, or in the pages of legal writers, and may, therefore, seem not unlikely to furnish materials for future investigation and discussion before the superior tribunals; while, on many points, they begin to be of sufficient volume and importance to afford grounds for determining the prudence of contesting a will that may not be strictly conformable to the letter or spirit of the act.

The first and most material question would seem to be, what wills are within the act? And the clause of the act that professes to determine this point, has unfortunately, though, as we must think, without adequate cause, given rise to much diversity of interpretation. The 34th section enacts, "that this act shall not extend to any will made before the 1st day of January, 1838; and that every will re-executed or republished, or revived by any codicil, shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to have been made at the time at which the same shall be so re-executed, republished, or revived." With reference to this enactment, Sir Herbert Jenner, in the case of Hobbs v. Knight, (1 Curt. 768), before the Prerogative Court in 1838, observed: "But for this clause, every will made after the passing of the act, namely, the 3rd July, 1837, in order to be valid, must have been executed in the manner prescribed by the statute; but, by this section, any will executed in the manner allowed by the law, previous to the passing of the act, would be valid, if made before the 1st January of this year; and, it appears to the court, that this clause was inserted for the purpose of the alteration in the law becoming known before it should come into effect; but the court cannot think that the Legislature intended, that wills executed before the 1st Jan. 1838, should be subject to the old law for an indefinite term, and that they might be altered, obliterated, or interlined, and still continue to have effect. If this were the true interpretation of the statute, what would be the effect? Suppose a will executed on the day before the act came into operation, that will would require neither witness nor signature: the consequence would be, that the testator, if he lived sixty years, might from time to time alter the will to any extent; he might remove the names of legatees and substitute others; he might substitute one residuary legatee for another, and one executor for another, and make an entirely new disposition of the property without the necessity of having any witnesses, or of any persons being privy to the alterations, if these changes and alterations were capable of being identified as his act. This is one of the inconsistencies that would arise from an extended application of the 34th section of the act. Again, the 18th clause of the statute enacts, that a will shall be revoked by the subsequent marriage of the testator; but a will executed before the 1st January, 1838, would not be revoked by marriage alone, and would be revoked by presumption arising from an alteration in the circumstances of the testator, contrary to the provisions of the 18th section. These are consequences so inconsistent with the professed intention of the Legislature to place all wills from a certain date on the same footing, that the court is of opinion that it never could have been intended by the Legislature to leave wills executed prior to the time when the act came into operation, subject to all the considerations of the law as it stood previously; and, therefore, that a more restricted interpretation must be put upon the words; and the court will hold, until otherwise advised by the decision of a superior tribunal, that wills executed before the 1st January, 1838, are subject to the provisions of the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, with respect to any act done to them subsequently to that day."

According, then, to the opinion here expressed by the learned judge of the Prerogative Court, wills made previously to the 1st January, 1838, are within the act, with respect to any acts, not only of republication, but also of revocation, alteration, or obliteration, done to them after the 31st December, 1837, though they may not have been republished subsequently to that day. This view of the construction of the clause has been followed by the Prerogative Court in several subsequent cases. (In the Goods of Livock, deceased, 1 Curt. 906; Pechell v. Jenkinson, 2 Curt. 276; In the Goods of Brooke, deceased, Id. 343). But it differs in a considerable and important degree from that entertained on the subject by some of the ablest expositors of the statute.

"A will," says Mr. Shelford, "made before the end of 1837, but republished or revived afterwards, will be subject to the provisions of the new act; but it is apprehended that such republication or revival can only be effected by an instrument executed in the manner prescribed by that act." (Law of Wills, 230). And Mr. Jarman, in his recently published Treatise of Wills, (Vol. 1, p. 187), observes, that, "Where a will made before is republished by a codicil made on or since the 1st January, 1838, or by re-execution, in the manner prescribed by the new law, the codicil, or the re-execution, has the effect of subjecting the will for all purposes to the operation of the act." And Sir E. Sugden, (2 V. & P. 256), remarks, "that a will executed before 1838, is within the act, if duly republished." It would seem, therefore, that, in the opinion of these learned authors, any other acts relating to the will, except republication, and before republication, are to be treated and dealt with according to the old law, and not according to the new law. And this mode of interpretation is more explicitly propounded by Mr. George Sweet, in his edition of the act, p. 77.—"The object of this enactment is to be got at, if at all, by means of a logical process of rather a refined kind; the meaning seems to be this: if, after 1837, an attempt is made to revive or republish a will made before 1838, it is to be considered, for that purpose, as a will within the act; and if the means are sufficient, then the will is for all purposes within the act. The object might have been more clearly attained by enacting, that, after the 31st of December, 1837, wills made before that time shall, for the purposes of republication or revival, be within the act; and if republished or revived, then for all purposes."

If we try this mode of interpretation by the test proposed by Sir Herbert Jenner, we think it will be found to give rise to less inconsistencies than are likely to be occasioned by the construction adopted in the Prerogative Court; indeed, scarcely more than are inseparable from every legislative change, and inevitably attend the transition from the old law to the new. For, according to the former mode of interpretation, wills in existence at the time when the act came into operation remain subject to the old law, in all respects, until they are republished: they are within the new law as to any act of republication done to them; and, after they are so republished, they become, in all respects, subject to the new law. But, according to the construction adopted in the Prerogative Court, such wills, before they are republished, are subject, in some respects, to the new law; but, in other respects, to the old law. And it may be difficult, in some instances, clearly to mark out the line that is to divide the subjects of the old law from the subjects of the new. For, if the effect of the testator's marriage in revoking such wills, is, as Sir Herbert Jenner says, to be determined by the new law, it would seem to follow, that the exchange of one estate for another, or a re-settlement or other conveyance leaving a disposable interest in the testator, or the death of a devisee in tail, or of a legatee who is a child of the testator, (events or acts occasioning a partial revocation of the will), are events or acts whose effect ought also to fall within the province of the new law, and be determined by the provisions of the third, twenty-third, thirty-second, and thirty-third sections of the act. But can it be intended or contemplated as a consequence of the doctrine of the Ecclesiastical Court, that, not merely the general effect and operation of a will, but the force and construction of its particular dispositions, shall thus be regulated, not by the law which obtained at the time when the will was made, and which was in the mind of the person who framed it, but by a law since created, and introducing new principles, and an altered system of testamentary jurisprudence?

The act does not require that the will should be dated; and where a testamentary paper is without a date, recourse must be had to extrinsic evidence, to shew, whether it was made before or after the epoch that separates the new law from the old. (See In the Goods of Mary Taylor, 5 Jur. 1041). But if there be nothing to shew, conclusively, when it was made, it will be presumed to have been executed according to the law in force at the time when it was made; and, therefore, if it be not conformable to the new law, but satisfies the requisition of the old law, it will be presumed to have been made before the new law came into force. Thus, where a testatrix died in 1839, leaving, amongst other testamentary papers, an unattested codicil without a date, written on the same paper with a will dated in 1830, and the latest date appearing on any of the papers was 1837, and there were no circumstances to shew or to lead to a supposition that the codicil was signed after the 1st January, 1838, it was considered that the court was bound to presume that it was made before that time; and, therefore, was not within the operation of the new act. (Pechell v. Jenkinson, 2 Curt. 273).

An unattested will, made at sea by a purser of a man of war, has been held, in the Prerogative Court, to be valid, as the will of a seaman at sea, under the exception contained in the 11th section of the act, which provides, "that any soldier, being in actual military service, or any mariner or seaman, being at sea, may dispose of his personal estate, as he might have done before the making of the act." Some of the reasons assigned for the exception, (which was not merely to protect illiterate persons), it was said, applied just as well to the commander in chief as to a common seaman; the same sudden emergency might arise to render it necessary for the individual to dispose of his property by word of mouth in the one case, as in the other; and whilst at sea, the one might be inops consilii, as well as the other. Sir Herbert Jenner was, therefore, of opinion, that the term "mariner or seaman" does not exclude any person in her Majesty's navy, though superior officers of the ship, being "at sea," from the exception contained in the act. (Hayes, deceased, 2 Curt. 338). And, in like manner, the will of a major in the army, made while in service in India, has been held to be within the same exception, as the will of a "soldier in actual military service." (In the Goods of Johnson, deceased, 2 Curt. 341). And the exception is understood to extend to the will of a person in the military service of the East India Company; (In the Goods of Doddison, 2 Curt. 396); also, to the will of a seaman, serving on board a ship, though on shore at the time of making the will. (In the Goods of Lay, 2 Curt. 378).

The statute 1 Vict. c. 26, does not extend to the colonies, for the colonies are not bound by an act of parliament, unless particularly named. (Anon., 2 P. W. 291; Shedden v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 487). If, therefore, the testator have landed property as well in England as in the colonies, where the Statute of Frauds is in force, (i. e. all the colonies in the West Indies, except Bermuda, British Guiana, Trinidad, and St. Lucia; and those of North America, except Lower Canada, (4 Burge C. L. 478),) he must execute his will, so as to comply both with the Statute of Frauds and the new act.

The authorities in the East Indies have, with certain exceptions, re-enacted the Will Act, but such act was not to come into operation till the 1st February, 1839. Accordingly, (In the Goods of Foy, deceased, 2 Curt. 328), an unattested will, made in 1838, by an English officer in the East India Company's service in India, (whereby, it seems, he acquired a domicile in India, Bruce v. Bruce, 8 Bro. P. C. 566; Marsh v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & P. 231), having been proved at the Cape of Good Hope, whither he had gone on leave for the benefit of his health, and died there, was admitted to probate also in the Prærogative Court. LONDON, FEBRUARY 5, 1842.

Our readers will have observed, in the last Number of THE JURIST, (p. 22), a statement by a correspondent, that several of the most distinguished Conveyancers act on the doubt, whether trustees for sale, selling under restrictive conditions, do not commit a breach of trust, so far as to reject at once titles submitted to them by purchasers under such contracts.

We believe our correspondent is right in stating, that some eminent Conveyancers have adopted the practice of taking such an objection to titles, but on what ground of authority or reasoning so sweeping and general an objection is to be supported, we do not understand. A point, of the kind under discussion, arose in a late case, (Hobson v. Bell, 2 Beav. 17), in which a mortgagee, with a power of sale, sold the mortgaged property under special conditions of sale, one of which was as follows:

"The vendor shall deliver an abstract of title to the purchaser, or his solicitor, within two days of the day of sale, to the stock in question; and all and every objection to the title shall be made and communicated in writing to the vendor's solicitor, within twenty-one days after the delivery of the abstract; and if the same be found valid, the vendor shall be at liberty to rescind the contract on returning to the purchaser his deposit money; but all and every objection to the title, not so taken and communicated within such period of twenty-one days from the delivery of the abstract aforesaid, shall be deemed waived; and, in this respect, time shall be considered the essence of the contract."

On an objection being taken, that this condition was so depreciating as to amount to a breach of trust, the court held that it was not so. The case relied upon in support of the objection to the title, in Hobson v. Bell, was a case of Ord v. Noel, (5 Madd. 438). That was a case, in which the property sold was vested by the defendant in trustees for sale, on trust to pay a debt to a creditor of the defendant's father; and, subject thereto, to pay the proceeds to the defendant. The trustees for sale employed, to conduct the sale, a person who was the solicitor of the creditor; and although, at the sale, the father of the defendant gave notice that the sale would be impeached by him, and although the auctioneer employed had advised, that, for the purpose of obtaining a good price, the estate should be sold in lots, yet, notwithstanding the notice, it was sold, under the direction of the solicitor's clerk, and in one lot, and that on the suggestion of the creditor and his friends, the creditor being the only bidder. The evidence shewed, that the only reason for thus pressing on the sale, was, that the creditor was anxious that money should be raised. On this state of things, the Vice-Chancellor held, that there had been great improvidence on the part of the trustees; and refused to decree specific performance. All that was decided, therefore, in this case, was, that the particular circumstances amounted to a depreciation, of which, indeed, there could be no doubt; that a sale by the agent of trustees for sale, conducted with a gross disregard of the interests of the cestuis que trust, and an exclusive attention to the wishes of a client of the trustees' agent, having an interest adverse to that of the trustees, was such a sale as amounted to a breach of trust; and that, under such circumstances, the court would not help the purchaser. But the case of Ord v. Noel has, obviously, nothing whatever to do with the question, whether the mere fact of selling, under restrictive conditions, by trustees, is such a depreciation as to amount to a neglect of duty on their part. Lord Langdale's decision in Hobson v. Bell goes no farther, directly, than to pronounce, that the particular condition before him had not such a depreciating effect. The inference from his Lordship's decision is, however, that, if the condition had been sufficiently depreciating, he would have held it a defect of title; and he, therefore, reduces the question to one of fact, whether special conditions of sale are or are not bona fide depreciating?

Now, it may be questioned, we think, whether any restrictive conditions of sale can be shown to be actually and bona fide prejudicial to the sale. If, by being prejudicial, is meant, simply, reducing the amount that will be offered for the property put up for sale, there can be no question, that any materially restrictive condition of sale will have that effect. But it should be recollected, that such a reduction of price is merely an expression in money of the amount of defect or difficulty under which the title labours; and it has simply the effect of imposing at once, and by means of the contract, on the vendor, some pecuniary loss, instead of leaving him to incur it, and probably, to a greater extent, at a future period when the defect shall have been discovered.

Suppose that there is really some defect of title, not, of course, going the length of a positive and insurmountable blot on it as a holding title, but rendering it more or less unmarketable; if a vendor puts such a title into the market, without special conditions, it is obvious, that, though he may obtain a purchaser at the full apparent value of the property, yet, when the title comes to be investigated, he will be compelled either to release the purchaser wholly from his contract, or to make an adequate deduction.

Suppose, on the other hand, the special condition not to relate to any actual blot on the title, but merely to the question who is to bear the expense of fully deducing and verifying such title, as the vendor shews upon the abstract. This is the point raised by the resolution of the Birmingham Law Society. It is obvious, that such a condition would never be inserted, except where, from the nature of the evidences of title, the expense of deducing and verifying the title, whether arising from the production of deeds or of copies of deeds, or from the evidence strictly requisite to establish particular facts, would cause an expense excessive in amount. If the vendor did not protect himself by restrictive conditions of sale, against such expense, he might, it is true, obtain a higher nominal price for the property; but, it is quite clear, that the surplus, which he would receive with one hand, he would have to pay out with the other. Indeed, it might frequently happen, that the advance of price would fall very far short of the expense to which the vendor would render himself liable, in the endeavour not to damp the sale. Sir Edward Sugden mentions a case, in which the expense of attested copies of deeds, which would of course fall upon the vendor, if there were no special stipulation, exceeded 2000*l*. (1 Vend. & P. 38). The result of special stipulations, where there is some defect or difficulty attending the title, is probably, in general, a saving to both parties; at any rate, it is advantageous to the seller, who gets a higher price than he otherwise would do, because of the well-known disposition of purchasers rather to underestimate than overestimate, in their calculations of value, the drawback of a future and contingent evil. Whatever, therefore, may be the effect upon purchasers, we cannot conceive a case, if there be any defect of title, in which it would be prejudicial to the vendor to sell under special conditions as regards such defect.

It seems to us, that, in every imaginable case of this nature, it is nothing more on the part of the vendor than a contract to sell at a less price than the apparent value of the estate,—the difference being regulated by a calculation, which practice must render tolerably certain and accurate, of the value to the vendor of selling, and selling at once; and the loss to the purchaser arising out of the contingent danger and expense to which he renders himself liable.

COPYHOLD COMMUTATIONS AND ENFRANCHISEMENTS, UNDER THE 4 & 5 VICT. c. 35.

I. COMPULSORY COMMUTATIONS.

2. Consideration of the Commutation.

The equivalent which is to be given to the lord in exchange for the commuted rights, may assume either of two forms. It may either be an annual sum payable to him by way of rent-charge on the land, or it may be a fine payable to him on the death of the tenant, or the alienation of the tenement, or at some fixed periods which shall be ascertained by the agreement of the parties.

Rent-Charge.—We have already seen in what manner the amount of the entire rent-charge for the whole commutation, or the amounts of the apportioned rent-charges for the separate lands, are to be fixed either by the terms of agreement itself, or by the estimate of the valuers; and how the amounts of the separate rent-charges may be left subject to an increase or diminution, at a given rate, in certain specified events. In the latter case the schedule of apportionment, as well as the agreement, should specify the rate of the increase and diminution, and the events on which it is to take place. (Sects. 14, 37).

Where the amount of the apportioned rent-charge exceeds 20*s.*, the annual sum payable to the lord is to be valued and variable with the price of corn in the same manner as the tithe rent-charge. For this purpose, the amount fixed by the apportionment is to be considered as laid out, in equal third parts, in the purchase of wheat, barley, and oats, at the prices mentioned in the act, and ascertained by the average of the seven years next preceding the passing of the act. The number of bushels of the several descriptions of corn, which might thus be purchased at those prices, will constitute the permanent amount of the rent-charge. And the annual sum payable to the lord will be the value in money of that number of bushels of each kind of corn at the prices ascertained by the seven years' average, as published under the Tithe Commutation Act, in the January next preceding the time of payment. (Sect. 36).

The rent-charge is to commence in general from the 1st January next after the confirmation of the apportionment; and the first payment to be made on the 1st July following. (Sect. 36). But the commencement may, in certain cases, be deferred by the agreement of the parties, or the order of the commissioners. This provision is especially framed with the intention of facilitating the arrangement and obviating objections, where a tenant, and, in particular, of copyholds for lives, has already paid his fine on admission, and the justice of the case requires, that he should be considered as discharged from the obligations of his tenure, till the recurrence of an occasion for the payment of a fine. With this view the parties are enabled by the terms of the agreement to provide, that the apportioned rent-charge shall not commence till the period of the next act or event on which the fine or other commuted right would have become due and payable. (Sect. 14). This provision, indeed, is confined to the apportionment in respect of lands, the tenant of which is a party to the agreement. But the commissioners have a discretionary power of deferring the commencement of the rent-charge, in any such case, whether expressly comprised in the agreement or not. (Sect. 23). And in order to facilitate the due performance of this part of the commissioners' duties, the valuers are required to state in their schedule of valuation the particular cases calling for the exercise of this power. (Sect. 28). And in these cases the entire rent-charge, being at first less than its full amount, will be proportionably increased, when the specified period arrives.

The rent-charge is to be considered as charged upon, and issuing out of, the particular lands in respect of which it is apportioned; and is to be payable by two half-yearly payments, on the 1st July and 1st January, to the lord of the manor mentioned in the schedule of apportionment. (Sects. 31, 36).

If the lord has only an estate for life, or other limited interest in the manor, that circumstance is to be taken into consideration for the purpose of determining whether the whole, or what portion of the rent-charge is to be paid to him, with a due regard to the rights of the persons entitled in remainder. (Sect. 28).

To meet the case of the death of the lord in the middle of a half-year, the provisions of the act for the apportionment of rents, (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 22), are extended to the rent-charges under this act, rendering payable to his personal representative a proportionable part of the annual sum for so much of the current half-year as shall have then elapsed. (Sect. 50).

The rent-charge, if paid by the occupier, is to be deducted from his rent in account with his landlord. (Sect. 45). If, however, the proposed rent-charge exceed the amount of the rent paid by the occupier, the lands may, on his representation to the commissioners, be exempted from the provisions of the act, unless the tenant on the court-roll give security for payment satisfactory to the occupier and the commissioners. (Sect. 46).

The rent-charge, if in arrear, is to be recoverable by distress and entry, and perception of the rents and profits, in the same manner as the tithe commutation rent-charge. (Sects. 47, 48, 49).

When the commutation is for a rent-charge, it is to be accompanied by a small fine of a fixed amount, not exceeding 5s., which will remain as a badge of the tenure, and be payable on death or alienation, in respect of each tenement. (Sects. 14, 28).

Fine.—The commutation may also be in consideration of a fine payable in respect of the several lands. Its amount may either be fixed by the original agreement, or left, subject to increase or diminution by the valuers, after a certain rate. And it is to be valued in bushels of wheat, barley, and oats, in the same manner as the rent-charge; and variable according to the prices of grain ascertained by the seven years' average published next preceding the time of payment. (Sects. 15, 36).

It may be made payable either on the death or alienation of the tenant, or at some certain periods fixed by the agreement. (Sect. 15). And it is to be payable to the lord of the manor mentioned in the schedule of apportionment. (Sects. 31, 36).

The lord is to have the same remedies for the recovery of the commutation fines, as he now possesses by law for the recovery of fines on death or alienation; (Sect. 26); and, in addition, he is empowered to pursue the like remedies as are authorized for the recovery of fines payable on the admittance of infants, femes covert, and lunatics, under the 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 3. (Sect. 63).

The mode of commutation for a fine is not so extensively applicable, nor is likely to be so frequently adopted, as that of commutation for a rent-charge. But, in the case of copyholds for lives, to which it is more particularly adapted, it would have the advantage of substituting a determinate payment that may be provided for with certainty, and variable only with the prices of agricultural produce, for an arbitrary and fluctuating impost that operates most injuriously as a check upon improvement.

The one kind of commutation may be substituted for the other by a supplemental agreement; and the payments of either class may be increased, or the one introduced in addition to the other, by a supplemental commutation of manorial rights not included in the original commutation. (Sect. 64).

3. Subject of the Commutation.

The manorial rights, which may be the subject of a compulsory commutation, are, as already mentioned, rents, reliefs, and services, except service at the lord's court; fines, heriots, and pecuniary compositions for heriots; the lord's rights in timber; and, if expressly mentioned in the agreement, his rights in mines and minerals. (Sect. 13).

Any other rights cannot be comprehended in a compulsory commutation, as such; but they may be inserted in the commutation, with the consent of all persons interested, or may be made the subject of a voluntary supplemental commutation. (Sect. 82).

And these rights, which may be the subject of commutation, may be rights in respect of any lands holden of the manor, either by copy of court roll, or by the custom of the manor, or in ancient demesne, or subject to any manorial rights; and, whether held in fee, or for lives, or for years. (Sect. 102).

4. Effect of the Commutation.

The effect of the commutation will be, that the lands will thenceforth be discharged from the rights above-mentioned—the lands either within the whole manor, or the particular portion of a manor, when divided by the commissioners; and the lands, not only of tenants who are parties, but also of those who are not parties to the agreement. And, in lieu of such commuted rights, the rent-charge, or the fine, apportioned in respect of each tenement, will, in future, become payable.

The lands will, however, after the commutation, remain parcel of the manor, and continue to be held by copy of court roll, and to be conveyed by surrender and admittance, or otherwise, as before the commutation. (Sect. 79). But they will cease to be subject to customs of borough English and gavelkind, or to any other customary mode of descent, or to any custom relating to dower or freebench, or tenancy by the curtesy; and will thenceforward become subject to the laws of descents, dower, and curtesy, affecting freehold lands; saving the custom of gavelkind in Kent; and saving also, in the case of curtesy, dower, or freebench, the rights of any husband or widow, married before the confirmation of the commutation, or of the husband or widow of any person who shall be tenant of the manor at that time. (Ib.)

5. Expenses of the Commutation.

The expenses of the proceedings for effecting the commutation are to be paid by the tenants, or the tenants and the lord of the manor, as the parties shall provide in the agreement, subject to the approbation of the commissioners, (sect. 14), or as the commissioners shall direct. (Sect. 65). But if no such provision or direction be made, the expenses will be payable, either by the tenants alone, or by the lord and tenants; and in such proportions between them, as is directed by the 30th section of the act.

The valuers, if so instructed by the commissioners, are to apportion the expenses amongst individual parties. (Sect. 28). And any dispute, as the amount or incidence of the expenses, is to be decided by the commissioners, (sects. 30, 65), who are to certify under their hands the amount to be paid by any person. And, if not paid accordingly, they may be recovered by distress, (sect. 65), or, upon failure of that remedy, by action at law against the party liable. (Sect. 66).

We have already seen, that the person admitted on the court rolls is the tenant who is to be dealt with under the act. And, if he be not himself beneficially interested, he is empowered to recover, by distress or action, against the equitable owner, any expenses with which he may be charged, in respect of the lands of which he is the legal tenant. (Sect. 67). Or, if paid by the occupier, they may be deducted from his rent, between him and his landlord, in the same manner as payments of the rent-charge. (Sects. 45, 67).

Parties having limited interests, either in the copyholds or the manor, who pay the expenses of commutation, are enabled, with the consent of the commissioners, to charge the amount on the inheritance. (Sects. 68, 69).

II. VOLUNTARY COMMUTATIONS.

Besides the commutations compulsory on the minority of the parties interested, the act provides also for commutations of another kind, which we have distinguished by the denomination of voluntary commutations. These are voluntary on the part of all persons immediately interested, and are binding only on such of them as actually become parties to the transaction. But they may be effected by parties having only a particular estate, or a limited interest, either in the manor or in the copyholds; and will be binding on the persons entitled in remainder or reversion, if notice be given to such persons in certain cases where it is required. (Sect. 52).

The agreements for these voluntary commutations cannot be entered into, without the consent and sanction of the commissioners. (Sect. 52). But no preliminary meeting of the parties is necessary to their validity.

With regard to the mode of proceeding, the agreements for these voluntary commutations, may, for purposes of practical convenience, be described as of three kinds:—

1. Agreements with a single Tenant: in which case, it is obvious, that no Apportionment is required.
2. Agreements with two or more Tenants, containing a Schedule of Apportionment.

If any number of the tenants of a manor can agree among themselves, not only as to the gross amount to be paid to the lord in respect of their aggregate lands, but also as to the particular sum to be charged on each tenement, this apportionment may be embodied in the agreement, or annexed to it, in the form of a schedule; and the transaction will thus be completed and brought to a conclusion by the agreement itself, without any necessity of resorting to subsequent valuations, apportionments, or other supplementary proceedings. This is, evidently, the most advisable course of proceeding, wherever it can be adopted; and that which is particularly recommended by the commissioners, as preventive of the expense, delay, and trouble likely to occur, where the apportionment is not included in the agreement, but left to be determined by an ulterior process of investigation. And this method may be pursued by all the tenants of a manor, where they can agree, as well as by any portion of them; and thus, a general or manorial commutation be effected in this manner, as well as a partial commutation.

3. Agreements with twelve or more Tenants, not containing a Schedule of Apportionment.

If as many as twelve persons, being tenants, or all the tenants of a manor, enter into an agreement with the lord for commutation, and the agreement does not include an apportionment, the commutation may be completed in the following manner:—A schedule of apportionment is to be drawn up by the steward of the manor, and sent by him to the commissioners, and passed by them through the same steps of inquiry and examination as an apportionment made by valuers, except that the commissioners cannot make any amendments or alterations in it, but with the consent of the parties; and, when completed, it is to be confirmed under the seal of the commissioners. (Sect. 52).

Besides an apportionment of the rent-charge or other consideration of the commutation, a voluntary commutation, like a compulsory one, may include in its terms an apportionment of the expenses, and a scale of fees to be in future payable to the steward, with a due regard to his vested interests or just expectations. (Sect. 52).

The subject of a voluntary commutation may be not only the manorial rights to which a compulsory agreement extends, but any other rights whatever expressly included in the agreement. (Sects. 52, 82).

The consideration of a voluntary, like that of a compulsory, commutation, may be either a rent-charge variable with the price of corn, and accompanied with a fine certain, not exceeding 5s.; or a fine on death or alienation; and the period of payment may be deferred, or the amount made subject to increase or diminution, in specified events, according to the terms of the agreement. (Sect. 52).

Besides an agreement comprising a schedule of apportionment, and a schedule of apportionment prepared by the stewards, the act provides, that the form of the instrument by which the commutation is effected, may, with the consent of the commissioners, be either that of a conveyance, such as might be employed for the purpose if the lord were seised in fee, or that of an agreement entered on the court rolls of the manor, with a copy thereof delivered to the tenant. (Sect. 52). The two latter forms seem more particularly adapted to a commutation by a single tenant, or a small number of tenants with common or connected interests. The agreement has this advantage over a deed of conveyance, that the former is exempted from stamp duty, as also is a schedule of apportionment. (Sect. 93).

III. ENFRANCHISEMENTS.

The principal obstacles that have hitherto impeded the enfranchisement of copyholds, arise in those cases, where either the lord of the manor, or the copyhold tenant, has only a partial interest in the manor or the copyhold; for, if the lord be only tenant for life, and affect to enfranchise, his act will not be binding on those entitled to the manor in remainder or reversion. In order that he may effect an absolute enfranchisement, he must be seised of the manor in fee, or be invested with a power to enfranchise reserved to him by such an owner in fee-simple. On the other hand, although an enfranchisement taken by a copyholder who has only a particular estate, enures in equity for the benefit of the remainder-men, yet it occasions the inconvenience of leaving in his heir-at-law the legal estate of inheritance in the freehold; and the inconvenience is aggravated by the want of any determinate standard or summary process for adjusting the proportion in which the consideration and expenses of the enfranchisement are to be borne by the several successors in the ownership.

Besides this, it becomes necessary, and is the general practice, on a future purchase of the enfranchised estate, to investigate, not only the copyhold title, but also the title to the manor, that the lord may be shewn to have had such an estate as enabled him effectually to enfranchise. And this practice is additionally authorized by the opinion that prevails, that a copyholder, accepting enfranchisement, brings upon his estate the charges and incumbrances affecting the manor.

The act attempts the removal, or the alleviation, of these impediments to voluntary, for it does not contemplate any compulsory, enfranchisement. For this purpose, it contains provisions for enabling the lord and tenant, whatever may be their respective interests, to make and accept enfranchisements, with the consent and under the general control of the commissioners, (sect. 56); for the distribution of the consideration paid for enfranchisement, amongst the persons successively interested under the title to the manor, (Ss. 73—75); and for deferring the payment of any portion, or, in some cases, of the whole of the principal of the consideration, where the circumstances of the copyhold title in justice require it. (Sects. 60—63). [It moreover contracts, that the enfranchised lands shall be held under the copyhold title, "and shall not be subject to any estates rights, titles, interests, or incumbrances affecting the manor." (Sect. 64).

We have said, that the enfranchisements contemplated by the act are altogether voluntary on the part of the persons who effect them. But the method of proceeding in the enfranchisement, and the instruments by which it is carried into effect, approximate closely to those employed in compulsory commutations, if the enfranchisement in hand is of a certain comprehension and extent.

For, if the tenants who are parties to an enfranchisement be less than twelve, not being all the tenants of the manor, the enfranchisement is to be effected by such a deed of conveyance as might be adopted for the purpose, if the lord were seised in fee, (s. 57); and such an instrument would be liable to stamp duty in respect of the interest of each tenant.

But, if the tenants who are parties to the enfranchisement amount to twelve or more, or, being less than twelve, are all the tenants of the manor, the enfranchisement may be effected by a schedule of apportionment, resembling that used in commutations. This schedule may either be the subject of specific agreement between the lord or tenants, or, if it be not agreed upon between them, it is to be prepared by the steward of the manor. (Sect. 56).

In this case, therefore, the instrument of enfranchisement will take one or other of the following forms:—

I. An agreement embodying, or referring to, an annexed schedule of apportionment.

II. A schedule of apportionment alone, as agreed upon by the parties.

III.—1. An agreement for enfranchisement between the lord and tenants, without a schedule.

2. A schedule of apportionment prepared by the steward.

And, whether an agreement combined with a schedule, or a schedule alone, it will be exempt from stamp duty. (Sect. 93).

The apportionment, on the basis of which the schedule is framed, may be made, either by the parties themselves, in their original agreement, or by valuers, to be appointed by them. In the latter case, the whole process of investigation, directed in commutation apportionments, is to be followed as far as it is applicable. (Sect. 56).

Notice of the intended enfranchisement is to be given to the persons entitled in remainder or reversion to the inheritance of the manor or copyhold; and, in case of dissent on the part of such persons, the commissioners have the power of withholding their consent. But, if, upon further inquiry, the commissioners are satisfied that there is no sufficient ground of objection to the enfranchisement, they may, notwithstanding such dissent, allow the enfranchisement to be completed. (Sect. 56). It appears, therefore, that enfranchisements under the act, though voluntary on the part of the persons immediately concerned, may, nevertheless, be compulsory with respect to persons having vested interests in remainder.

Besides the apportionment of the sums to be paid by each tenant, the schedule is to contain statements of the periods when they are to be paid, either the whole or part only, or with interest in the meantime, according to the adjustment of the commissioners; and also of the amount of compensation provided for the steward, and the proportions in which it is to be paid. (Sect. 56).

The schedule, if approved of by the commissioners, is to be confirmed by them under their seal; but they cannot make any alterations or amendments in the schedule without the consent of the parties. (Sect. 56).

A copy of the schedule is to be deposited with the steward, who is to indorse on it memoranda of the payment of the apportioned sums, which will be a sufficient discharge to the parties making the payment. (Sect. 78).

After the completion of the enfranchisement, either by the confirmation of the apportionment, or the execution of the conveyance, as the case may be, the lands enfranchised will become in all respects of freehold tenure, saving, nevertheless, to the tenant, his rights of common, and so as not to affect any limitations by settlement or will, to which they may be subject, nor any mortgages, which will become mortgages for a corresponding estate of the freehold, except that the charge on the lands for the consideration money is to rank as a first mortgage, (Sects. 70, 71, 72), to the priority of which the mortgages previously existing will be subject. (Sect. 81).

We may observe, in conclusion, that, in proceeding either with a commutation or enfranchisement, a party under a legal disability, having no constituted legal representative, may act by a person appointed by the commissioners. (Sect. 11). And when either the lord or tenant is under a disability, or has only a limited interest, it will become the duty of the commissioners to protect the interests of the expectant or reversionary proprietors; and, in such cases, before confirming the commutation or enfranchisement, the commissioners will require information, both of the value of the property, and the nature of the incidents to which it is subject; and, for that purpose, will require certain returns, (blank forms of which have been issued by the commissioners), to be made to them by the steward and a regularly appointed valuer. B.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE WILL ACT.

2. SIGNING AT THE FOOT OR END.

A will being written upon two sides of the same paper, the testator signed his name at the bottom of the first side, and his signature was attested by two witnesses. That side of the paper ended with an unfinished sentence, and the will concluded on the second side, "dated this 11th of April, 1838;" but there was no signature there. The will was clearly void, as not being signed "at the foot or end thereof," according to the requisitions of the 9th section of the act. (In the Goods of Milward, deceased, 1 Curt. 912). So, likewise, where the testatrix had signed her name in the margin of the will, probate was refused on motion. (In the Goods of Judith Wakeling, 5 Jur. 1164). In some other cases, however, the Prerogative Court has admitted a laxity of interpretation with regard to this requisite, inimical to the purposes therein proposed by the Real Property Commissioners, of putting an end to imperfect and informal testamentary papers. For instance, in a case in the present term, where the will was written on the front sides of two sheets of paper, and the writing covered the paper close down to the end of the second side, so as not to leave room for the signature of the testator and the attestation; and the testator signed his name, and the witnesses subscribed an attestation, at the bottom of the third side, or back of the second sheet; the will was, nevertheless, admitted to probate. (In the Goods of Carver, ante, p. 40). In this case, the will was written on a printed paper of instructions for making wills conformably to the new act; and the court remarked, that such printed papers frequently misled testators.

In another case, where a will concluded thus:—
"Signed, &c., by me, the testator, [Testator's signature.]
"In the presence of us, [Witnesses' subscriptions.]
"And I hereby appoint A. B. and C. D. executors."— the court did not treat the will as void by reason of the signature not being at the foot or end; but considered this appointment of executors, written under the signature of the testator, as not forming part of the will, and allowed administration with the will annexed to pass to the residuary legatee, without the clause appointing the executors, upon their consent. (In the Goods of Howell, deceased, 2 Curt. 342; S. P., In the Goods of Warden, deceased, 2 Curt. 335). Again, where a will concluded with the following attestation clause, in the handwriting of the testatrix:—

"Signed and sealed as and for the will of me, Elizabeth Woodington, in the presence of us.

"[Witnesses.]"

Sir Herbert Jenner observed: "The deceased, by placing her name where it stands, seems to have intended that it should answer the purpose of a description, as well as of a signature; and such signature being at the foot or end of the will, and the will being written by the deceased, and acknowledged by her to be her will, in the presence of two subscribing witnesses, I think this is a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature to satisfy the provisions of the statute." (In the Goods of Woodington, deceased, 2 Curt. 324).

3. SIGNING WITH A MARK.

The stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9, does not say that the name of the testator shall appear at the foot of the will, and signing with a mark was considered a sufficient signing under the Statute of Frauds, even where the person was able to write. (Taylor v. Dening, 3 Nev. & P. 228; S. C., nom., Baker v. Dening, 8 Adol. & Ell. 94). Accordingly, In the Goods of Bryce, deceased, (2 Curt. 325), where the will was signed by a mark, without the name of the testatrix appearing in any part of the instrument; and the manner of signature was sufficiently accounted for by affidavit, the testatrix being ill at the time, and the paper was identified as being the will of the deceased, it was held, that this was a sufficient signing within the Will Act.

4. SIGNING BY ANOTHER FOR THE TESTATOR.

The statute allows a will to be signed for the testator by another person; but it does not say that the signature must be in the testator's name. And where a testator, who was too ill to sign his will, requested another person to sign it for him, which he did, not in the name of the testator, but in his own name, the court inclined to the opinion that this was a sufficient compliance with the act. (In the Goods of Clark, deceased, 2 Curt. 329). However, the most correct and safest course appears to be for the amanuensis to sign the testator's name, with a mention in the conclusion of the will, that he did so in the presence and by the direction of the testator.

In a recent case before the Prerogative Court, it happened, that the person who signed the testator's name, at his request, was one of the witnesses who attested the execution of the instrument. Upon this, Sir Herbert Jenner observed: "All that the act requires is, that the will shall be signed by the testator, or by some person for him, in the presence of two witnesses, who shall attest the same; there is nothing which prevents the person making the signature for the testator being one of the witnesses to attest and subscribe the will;" and was of opinion, that this was a good execution under the act. (In the Goods of Bailey, 1 Curt. 914). We must, with all submission, beg leave to question the soundness of this decision; for, as a learned commentator upon the act has remarked, (H. Sugden, Law of Wills, 38), "it could not be the intention of the legislature to require the testator to acknowledge the signature of his will by another person, to the very person who had signed it for him." But there seems to be no objection to the amanuensis being a legatee or devisee under the will.

5. ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF THE SIGNATURE.

It has sometimes been supposed, that the word "ac-knowledgeed" refers only to a signature when made for the testator by another person; but the opinion received in the Prerogative Court, and most generally entertained in other quarters, is, that the acknowledgment by the testator of his own signature, as well as of the signature made by some other person in his presence and by his direction, is sufficient, if attested as required by the act. (In the Goods of Regan, 1 Curt. 908). So, likewise, in a case already cited, (In the Goods of Woodington, ubi sup.), where the testatrix, having written the will herself, wrote her name in the attestation clause, (which was held to be a sufficient signature), and in the presence of the witnesses acknowledged the will to be her will, and to have been written by her, it was held that this was a sufficient acknowledgment of the signature.

The words, "or acknowledged by the testator," are not in the Statute of Frauds; but, according to the construction put by the courts upon that part of the Statute of Frauds which required the will "to be attested" by witnesses, it was not necessary for the witnesses to see the testator actually sign, but it was enough if he acknowledged his signature before them; and in some modern cases the courts have gone further still, and have held, that any recognition by the testator of the instrument as his act, or even a simple request to witness it, was sufficient for the purpose. The Will Act, on the contrary, expressly enacts, that the signature, if not made, should be acknowledged before the witnesses; and, therefore, it would seem, that the acts which were accepted as equivalents or substitutes for the acknowledgment of signature, imported by construction only into the Statute of Frauds, can hardly, in strict propriety, be admitted to supply the place of the form expressly required by the new act. In the following case, however, the Prerogative Court seems to have applied the rule, furnished by the old cases, to a case falling within the present law.

A testatrix having signed her will, and, on a subsequent day, sent for two persons to attest it; upon their arrival, they said, they were come, as she requested, for the purpose of signing their names as witnesses to her will, which was then produced, to which the testatrix replied: "I am very glad of it, thank God!" and they then subscribed the will. Dr. Addams submitted, that this was a virtual acknowledgment of her signature by the deceased. The act does not expressly require a direct acknowledgment. Suppose a person wrote his will on a sheet of paper, and signed it, and sent for two witnesses, and said: "there is my will, attest it;" would not that be sufficient? Is not the present case, in effect, the same? He cited Bythewood's Conveyancing, [qu. Powell on Devises], by Jarman, Vol. 1, p. 75; and the court being of opinion, that, under the circumstances, the signature was sufficiently acknowledged by the testatrix, under the 9th section of the stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, allowed administration with the will annexed to pass. (In the Goods of Warden, deceased, 2 Curt. 334).

But this case is quite irreconcilable with another before the same court, hardly distinguishable in its circumstances, where the court did not refer to the rule of the old authorities, which we have given our reasons for thinking inapplicable, but proceeded simply upon a faithful and rigorous observance of the express words of the act. In the case we allude to, all the deceased did was to request the witnesses to sign their names to the paper, without saying that it was a will, or that the signature was hers; and it was held, that this was not a sufficient compliance with the act. (In the Goods of Rawlins, deceased, 2 Curt. 326; S. P. In the Goods of Mary Harrison, 5 Jur. 1017).

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE JURIST*.

Sir,—You will greatly oblige me by publishing in your valuable work, the following communication.

Yours, very faithfully, T. STARKIE.

My attention has been drawn to an uncandid and unfair article in the last number of the Law Magazine, which professes to be a criticism on my forthcoming edition of the Law of Evidence. It is uncandid, because it imputes the omission of many cases, which have been published whilst the work has been going through the press, and which could not be systematically arranged, except by means of an appendix; advantage is thus taken of the publication of part of the work previous to the Appendix, for charging the negligent omission of cases, which could not be inserted in the body of the work. Unfair, because the writer untruefully alleges the omission of several cases which are actually contained in the work.

It is very far from my intention to enter into any discussion with the writer of this article, but, to the profession some explanation is due. Owing to the great accumulation of authorities and statutes relating to the subject, subsequently to the last preceding edition, and also to my own professional engagements, the present edition has been in the press between two and three years, a period much longer than I had anticipated; and, consequently, numerous authorities published during the printing of the work have necessarily been reserved for the Appendix, in which they are already arranged under the same heads, in the same order, and with constant reference to the very pages of the original text—a course adopted in the second edition. I hope, that this course will not be of serious inconvenience to any one who may be disposed to consult the book; and trust, that the profession will suspend their judgment on the work, until the whole shall have been submitted to their consideration.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, Feb. 3.

Sir T. Freemantle gave notice of motion, for the 8th instant, on behalf of the President of the Board of Trade, for leave to bring in a Bill to amend and consolidate the Laws relating to the Trade of the British Possessions in the Colonies.

Also, on behalf of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, for the 17th instant, for leave to bring in a Bill for the better Provision of effectually inspecting all Houses, licensed by the Magistrates at Sessions, for the Reception of Insane Persons in England and Wales.

THE LATE MR. JACOB.

(From the Law Magazine).

He was a man who had accumulated a vast extent of knowledge; and he had the power of recalling, at a moment's notice, any portion of his learning which happened to be required for immediate use. Few men have possessed the faculty of arguing more strongly, or more acutely. He appeared to have peculiar pleasure in the thorough investigation of legal doctrines; and, by the careful consideration of common and statute law, of judicial decisions, and of general reasoning, he was continually aiming at the discovery and establishment of clear and definite legal opinions. Few lawyers met him in consultation without gaining instruction; or watched him in the conduct of a cause, without admiring the fertility of his mind in suggesting new and unexpected points of argument. We may add, that the moral qualities of Mr. Jacob, no less than his intellectual ability, commanded admiration. He was, of all men, the most scrupulous and conscientious in the discharge of his duty to his client. No prospect of emolument ever induced him to undertake business which he could not transact in his own person; nor would the inconvenience of length of time induce him to forego a discussion which he believed to be advantageous to his cause. By his amenity of disposition, his uniform good humour, his careful abstinence from irritating and angry remarks, his readiness to impart assistance and advice, and his universal courtesy to all with whom he came in contact, he established, amongst the profession, such feelings of respect and friendship as created universal regret on his retirement, and the deepest sorrow at his melancholy end. He was the person whose early promotion to the bench, in one of the courts of equity, has long been desired, not merely by counsel practising in the court, but also by the leading conveyancers. He was regarded as, of all men, the most capable of securing the doctrines of the law of real property upon a distinct and satisfactory basis. He was possessed of a peculiarly judicial mind, able to weigh arguments one against another; and, by the strength of his memory, and the clearness of his intellect, to survey all the circumstances of a complicated case, spread forth as in a map before him. But, it has pleased Providence to close his career at the moment when he was approaching the threshold of that office for which he had exhibited peculiar fitness. Lawyers will mourn over one whom they would have addressed with confidence and respect; and the country has reason to lament a man of vast attainment and strict integrity, who, had his life been spared, would have rendered great public services in a responsible and exalted station.

* As the Law Magazine is published only at intervals of three months, we think that Mr. Starkie is entitled to this opportunity of making an immediate reply to the attack upon his work. We shall take an early opportunity of expressing our own opinion on the new edition.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 12, 1842.

Is a case now pending before the Lord Chancellor, (Herring v. Cloberry), a discussion has arisen on the question, what is inadmissible in evidence on the ground of being a privileged communication. No point in the intricate and much debated Law of Evidence offers greater intricacies, or has been the subject of greater conflict of decision, than this; and it can hardly yet be said to be settled.

The general result of the authorities, at present, seems to be this, that, as to the parties themselves, where the course of proceedings permits them to be compelled to give evidence against themselves, they are compellable to disclose such communications made confidentially to their legal advisers, as have been made without reference to existing or contemplated litigation; but, that they are not compellable to divulge such communications, if made in reference to an existing or contemplated litigation. And that, as to the counsel, attorneys, or solicitors of the parties, they are not compellable to divulge matter communicated, or come to their knowledge, in their character of legal advisers, whether made or not in, or in contemplation of, litigation. (See Bolton v. Corporation of Liverpool, and Grundy v. Gasbell, 1 My. & K. 88, 98; Nias v. Northern and Eastern Railway Company, 3 My. & C. 385; and Phil. Evid., 8th ed., c. 2, s. 3).

Such seem to be the general rules of the Courts of Law and Equity on this subject; but, it must be observed, that, in addition to the difficulty arising from some conflict of authority, as to whether the privilege, as it affects disclosures by attorneys, is general, or is limited to the circumstances communicated to them in reference to the suit, there is, in every case, a further difficulty in determining whether the facts communicated themselves, or the mode in which the knowledge of them has been acquired, are such as to bring the case within the rule, that the knowledge must have been acquired by the legal agent strictly in his character of legal agent.

It is not, however, our present purpose to investigate in detail what is the law on this subject, but to examine the reason of the law; and we confess, that to us it seems that great doubts may be entertained whether the whole foundation of the doctrine is not based on false reasoning.

Mr. Phillips, in his work on Evidence, (8th edit. p. 173), thus states it:—"Communications made on the faith of that professional confidence which a client reposes in counsel, attorney, or solicitor, are not allowed to be revealed in a court of justice to the prejudice of the client. The expediency of this rule must depend, not on the impropriety of violating the confidence reposed, but on a consideration, that the collateral inconvenience which would ensue, if no such confidence were reposed, would preponderate over the direct mischief produced by the chance of misdecision or failure of justice resulting from the want of evidence. If, in the cases within the operation of the rule, the only confidence reposed was a confession of guilt or dishonesty, the rule would be obviously detrimental to the interests of justice; but it is conceived, that, in a multitude of instances, a person possessed of just rights would be materially impeded in vindicating them, if every communication made to his professional adviser might be used against him; if such were the law, it would be necessary, in self-defence, to accompany all communications made to a professional adviser with a statement of the several circumstances and explanations, which, however unnecessary for the purpose of the communication, would be requisite to prevent it from being unfairly used."

And Lord Brougham, in the great case of Bolton v. Corporation of Liverpool, (1 My. & K. 88), addressing himself to the argument, that a party should be compelled to produce cases laid by him before counsel in contemplation of proceedings, makes the following observations:—"It seems plain, that the course of justice must stop, if such a right exists. No man will dare to consult a professional adviser with a view to his defence, or to the enforcement of his rights. The very case which he lays before his counsel, to advise upon the evidence, may, and often does, contain the whole of his evidence; and may be, and frequently is, the brief with which that or some other counsel conducts his cause. The principle contended for, that inspection of cases, though not of the opinions, may always be obtained as of right, would produce this effect, and neither more nor less, that a party would go into Court to try the case, and there would be the original of his brief in his own counsel's bag, and a copy of it in the bag of his adversary's counsel. Nay, as often as a party found himself unprepared, or suspected that something new had come to his adversary's knowledge, he might (at least if he were plaintiff) postpone the trial, and obtain a discovery of these new circumstances, which, in all likelihood, had been laid before counsel for advice. If it be said, that this Court compels the disclosure of whatever a party has at any time said respecting his case—may, even wrings his conscience to disclose his belief, the answer is, that admissions not made, or thoughts not communicated to professional advisers, are not essential to the security of men's rights in Courts of Justice. Proceedings for this purpose can be conducted in full perfection, without the party informing any one of his case, except his legal advisers. But without such communication, no person can safely come into a Court, either to obtain redress or to defend himself."

Now, the substance of these reasonings appears to be, that communications made by a party to his legal advisers, in their character as such, are to be privileged; because, if they are not, a person will not venture to communicate to his legal adviser all the facts of which he possesses a knowledge; that is, he will not be able to communicate to him, in safety, that information which weakens his own case; and, being thus obliged to leave him in the dark, as to his weak points, the legal adviser will be unable to make so good a case for the client as he could, if possessed of full knowledge of the whole. Now, if the principle and end of judicial investigation were, that each party should be able to tell his own story as advantageously as possible for himself, not informing the Court of the real facts, but only of so much of them as supports the case of the party, no doubt, it would be consistent with such a principle, that the confidential communications of the litigant to his advisers should be protected by privilege. But if, on the contrary, the true end of a judicial inquiry is, that the Court may learn the facts, and having learned them, may administer the law accordingly, then what argument of convenience to parties can be put in competition with the overwhelming importance of the Court's being enabled to obtain full knowledge of the true facts? And on what principle of justice can a rule be approved, the very essence of which is to give to a party the advantage of coming into court in the form best calculated to deceive that Court?

It is quite clear, that, in so far as the communications of the client to his adviser are of matters which give the client an advantage over his opponent, he has no interest, and will make no endeavour to conceal them. It is only where the circumstances communicated are such, that, if known, they would, pro tanto, turn the decision of the right against him, that there is any desire to withhold them. The only object, indeed, of ever communicating such circumstances, is to enable the adviser so to shape his case, upon the evidence which he puts forward, and so to manage the bringing forward of that evidence, as to avoid, in the remotest degree, anything that shall call the attention of the adversary, or of the Court, to the dangerous evidence; for no prudent man would communicate facts prejudicial to his own case, even to his counsel, except on the assumption, that, if unpaired with a knowledge of those facts, the counsel might, by reason of his ignorance of them, so shape his case as, inadvertently, to shew, that there were facts inconsistent with the case made. Therefore, the whole effect of shutting out evidence, on the ground of privilege, is to enable one or both parties to commit a fraud upon the Court, and to make the hearing of the cause a hearing on an assumed state of facts.

Lord Brougham's observation, that, if the rule were not as it is, "no man will dare to consult a professional adviser with a view to his defence, or to the enforcement of his rights," would, we admit, be true, if applied to the case of a man seeking to enforce merely apparent rights, but not if applied to the case of one having a solid right. A right, founded on the concealment of facts, which, if known, would destroy it, can hardly be considered such a right as a Court of justice should be astute to surround with protection; and if a man holding under such a right, were indirectly precluded from protecting his unfounded title, by the difficulty of so instructing legal advisers as to enable them to keep its defect out of view, it would, after all, only amount to laying down as a rule, that the law will not assist a party in asserting and maintaining as a right, that which, in truth, is no right at all.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE WILL ACT.

6. ATTESTATION.

The act required to be done in the presence of the witnesses is the signature of the testator. Their attestation and subscription, therefore, would seem obviously to have reference to that act, and to be an act which ought to be done subsequently to the other, and which would be unmeaning and ineffectual till the other is performed. In a recent case of rather a singular kind, where the witnesses signed first, and after them the testator, Sir Herbert Jenner refused probate on motion, and reserved the question of the validity of the will for the judicial opinion of the court. (In the Goods of Olding, 5 Jur. 1017)*.

The 9th section of the act does not expressly require that the witnesses should subscribe their names at the same time; but the natural construction of the words of that clause appears to be, that, when the signature is made or acknowledged, the witnesses shall then attest and subscribe, not one at one time and one at another. Accordingly, where a testator signed his will in the presence of one witness only, who subscribed it, and afterwards, on a subsequent day, acknowledged his signature in the presence of the same witness, who did not then subscribe it, and of another, who did, it was doubted whether this was a sufficient compliance with the act, and probate was refused. (In the Goods of Allen, deceased, 2 Curt. 231).

In the interpretation of that part of the 9th section, which requires the witnesses to subscribe "in the presence" of the testator, the same principles of construction seem likely to be adopted as were established with reference to the same words in the Statute of Frauds.

* See some observations on this case, Jurist, vol. 5, p. 1049.

Thus, where a will was executed by the testator in the same room where the witnesses were, and they attested the will in that room, this was an execution "in the presence" of the witnesses, and an attestation "in the presence" of the testator, although, by reason of the curtains of the bed in which the testator was lying being drawn, the witnesses could not actually see the testator sign, nor the testator actually see the witnesses sign. (Norton v. Clarke, 2 Curt. 320). On the other hand, where the testator signed in the presence of two witnesses, but they then removed into another room, where they subscribed their names as witnesses, this was held an invalid attestation. (In the Goods of Newman, deceased, 1 Curt. 914). If, however, the witnesses, after they withdrew into an adjoining room, were in such a situation in that room that the testator might have seen them from the room where he was, the subscription would, agreeably to the rule established by Shires v. Glascock, and that class of authorities, be valid, though he did not actually see them. But it is observable, according to the same authorities, that, when the testator signed, or acknowledged his signature, it was considered that he ought to be actually, and not merely constructively, present. And, therefore, even if we adhere to the old rule of construction, without taking up any more independent ground, the doctrine of constructive presence cannot be properly applied to that part of the 9th section, which requires the signature, or acknowledgment of the signature, of the testator, to be "in the presence of the witnesses."

The reasons which render it advisable, (notwithstanding the provision of the act, that no form of attestation is necessary), to insert a written attestation stating the essential circumstances of the execution, acquire an additional force from the practice adopted in the Ecclesiastical Courts. For, although the will is signed at the foot, and the names of two witnesses subscribed as having attested the will, yet, if there be no attestation clause, or if the attestation clause do not fully state the observance of all the requisite particulars, the Court of Probate will require an affidavit to shew that the statute was complied with. If it appear from such affidavit, though ex parte only, that the statute was not complied with in all respects, the court will refuse probate; but it will not, on motion upon affidavit ex parte, that the will was not duly executed, decree administration of the effects of the deceased, as dead intestate: for that the court cannot do unless the will is propounded. (In the Goods of Ayling, deceased, 1 Curt. 913).

If the formalities were correctly fulfilled, one of the witnesses, or the surviving witness, will be competent to depose to all the material facts. In the event of the death of both the witnesses, it is probable that the Court of Probate would shape its practice conformably to the rule prevailing in the superior courts, and admit proof of the witnesses' handwriting as sufficient, upon a consideration of the circumstances of the case, to warrant the conclusion, that the necessary forms were duly observed.

7. ALTERATIONS, OBLITERATIONS, &c.

Interlineations and alterations in a will, made after its execution, must, by the 21st section of the act, be executed and attested in the same manner as a will; but if the alterations are deposed to by affidavit (in which both the witnesses should join) as having been made before the execution, probate may pass with the alterations, as stated in the affidavit. (In the Goods of Ibbotson, deceased, 2 Curt. 337; In the Goods of Maria Rhodes, 5 Jur. 1041).

Where the will itself was made before 1838, it may be shewn by evidence on affidavit, and from collateral circumstances, that an unattested and undated alteration in it was made subsequently to the commencement of the operation of the new act. (In the Goods of Dyer, 5 Jur. 1016). And in such case, (the alteration being invalid, "except so far as the words or effect of the will before such alteration shall not be apparent"), the obliterations and erasures may be carefully examined, with glasses if necessary, by persons accustomed to inspect writings, in order to ascertain how the will originally stood; and probate shall pass with the obliterated and erased passages restored, if they can be made out; but if it cannot be discovered what those parts originally were, probate must pass with those parts in blank. (In the Goods of Ibbotson, ubi sup.). Thus, where there appeared in a will a legacy of thirty pounds, the word "thirty" being written on an erasure, and the alteration was not signed and attested, as required by the 21st section, and it could not be made out by inspection what the word was over which "thirty" was written, probate was decreed to pass with the legacy in blank. (In the Goods of Rippen, deceased, 2 Curt. 334; S. P., In the Goods of Lovock, deceased, 1 Curt. 906). In this case, it was deposed by a party who saw the will before the alteration, that the original word was "fifty." But the court is not at liberty to supply by parol testimony what is not apparent on the face of the will itself. So, likewise, where the testator, after the 1st January, 1838, erased certain words in a will executed in July, 1837, and wrote a memorandum, stating what the words erased originally were; but such memorandum was unattested, probate of the will as it originally stood was refused, the court considering that this memorandum could be looked at to shew what the words were which had been erased. (In the Goods of Brooke, deceased, 2 Curt. 343). There was an appeal from this decision to the Privy Council, where the point has been argued, but no decision has as yet been given.

8. REVOCATION BY "BURNING, TEARING, OR OTHERWISE DESTROYING."

In a case already cited, (Hobbs v. Knight, 1 Curt. 768), it was made a question, whether the cutting out of his signature by the testator, the rest of the paper remaining entire, amounted to a revocation of the will. The 20th section provides, "that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, shall be revoked, otherwise than as aforesaid," (that is, by marriage under the 18th section); "or by another will, &c.," which does not apply to this case; "or by the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some person in his presence, and by his direction, and with the intention of revoking the same." It was unnecessary to enter into the consideration whether the act done in this case might not be comprehended under the import of the word "tearing;" for the court was of opinion, that in order to bring the act within the meaning of the words "otherwise destroying," it is not necessary that the material of the will should be destroyed; but it is sufficient if the essence of the instrument, independently of its material, be destroyed: and the court considered the name of the testator to be essential to the existence of a will; and if that name be removed, the essential part of the will is removed, and the will is destroyed.

In the same case, Sir Herbert Jenner expressed an opinion that a similar excision of the names of the attesting witnesses, if done animo revocandi, would amount to a revocation; and that an obliteration of the testator's signature, in such a manner that it could not be made out, might, consistently with the 21st section, have the same effect.

But the word "cancelling," which was in the Statute of Frauds, having been advisedly omitted in the 20th section of the act, the cancellation of the will by striking it through with a pen, the names of the testator and the witnesses being likewise crossed out, but not entirely obliterated, will not operate as a revocation. (Stephens v. Taffrell, 2 Curt. 436).

Imperial Parliament.

Monday, Feb. 7.

The Attorney-General gave notice of motion for leave to bring in a Bill to amend and explain the Municipal Corporations Act. By a recent decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, it was declared, that, persons holding leases under corporations, were not eligible to sit as town councillors; and, if they did, were liable to a severe penalty. There were, at present, no less than 2400 cases of this kind.

In answer to a question from Mr. Buller, Sir Robert Peel contradicted the report that has been circulated as to intentions on the part of government to alter the constitution of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and to appoint a Presiding Judge to that Court. The Right Honourable Gentleman said, that the appointment of two new Equity Judges had no direct relation to the Judicial Committee; but, by their appointment, the arrear of causes in Chancery had been reduced from 500 to 200; and, it was possible, that the Vice-Chancellors might have, henceforth, more time at their disposal, and might take an active part in the proceedings of the Judicial Committee. These were reasons for postponing, at present, any alteration of the appellate jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee.

Mr. M. Sutton moved for and obtained leave to bring in a Bill to explain and continue to the 1st August, 1843, the Act to amend the Laws relating to Loan Societies.

Mr. E. Tennant moved, that the House should go into committee to take into consideration the Laws affecting the Copyright of Designs for the Ornament of Articles of Manufacture. After some observations on the subject, in which Mr. M. Phillips and Dr. Bowring took part, leave was given to bring in a Bill; and the Bill was afterwards brought in and read a first time, and was ordered to be read a second time on Tuesday, the 15th instant.

The House of Commons has ordered, that the House will not receive any Petitions for Private Bills after Friday, the 11th; that no Private Bills be read the first time after the 23rd March; and that the House will not receive any Report of Private Bills after the 27th May.

Tuesday, Feb. 8.

Mr. Godson moved for and obtained leave to bring in a Bill for better securing the Property in the Copyright of Books. His object was to have the Copyrights registered in the Court of Chancery, and to have similar Registrations of Mortgages and Assignments of Copyrights. At a later period of the evening, the Honorable and Learned Gentleman brought in his Bill, which was read a first time.

The Attorney-General obtained leave to bring in his proposed Bill for amending the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, (the Municipal Corporations Act).

Also, to bring in a Bill to allow of a Writ of Error, in any case of a Judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench on an application for a Mandamus.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The following gentlemen have been appointed Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—John Joseph Wise, of Ashborne, Derbyshire; Edward Cheney, of Birmingham; Henry Stubbs, of Nottingham; Charles Metcalfe, jun., of Wisbeach, Cambridgeshire.

A LAWYER'S POWERS OF ANIMAL MAGNETISM.—Lord Brougham, once, at the Lent Assizes at York, sat for some time intently looking at a witness who was giving evidence, and whom he was to cross-examine. At last the poor fellow, after several efforts to continue his replies, became so dreadfully alarmed, that he declared that "he could not say another word, unless that gentleman," pointing to Mr. Brougham, "would take his eyes off him."

These are recounted with a clearness of style, and nervous command of language; there is a tone of impartiality throughout which reflects great credit on the author. It should find its way to the libraries of all."—Monthly.

"Just and impartial."—Spectator.

"An able volume."—Literary Gazette.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 19, 1842.

If we had been asked what particular class of property did not require, for the security of the owner or the convenience and protection of the public, any kind of registration machinery, we should have answered, the property in literary productions. When a book is published, of a kind to which the author wishes to establish and perpetuate his claim, it bears, almost without exception, the name of the author, the name of the publisher, and the name of the printer. The name of the author, it is true, need not be printed or appear in a book; but, by law, the title of the book, with the name and residence of the publisher, ought to be registered with the Stationers' Company; and so the name and residence of the printer are directed to be printed on the first or last leaf of every book printed by him; and this must be done under a heavy penalty*. The latter statutory direction is, we believe, in practice invariably complied with; and if the former, viz. that relating to registration at Stationers' Hall, is, as we believe it is, very generally neglected, that only proves how practically unnecessary has been found any other system of registration than that which consists of the public exhibition and issue of a book by the publisher. If, indeed, a book obtains any reputation, and becomes, de facto, a property having value, it is publicly sold, and copies enough are certain to be in existence and easily traced; and whether it obtains a sale or not, as copies are deposited, of necessity, in certain public libraries, it is, for all practical purposes, perfectly impossible that evidence can be lost, of the fact of a given book having been put forth as the work of A., printed by B., and published by C.

Then, with respect to assignments or mortgages of copyrights. Of course, to the public generally it is perfectly immaterial who is the actual owner of a copyright; the knowledge of that fact can only become material to a person who is dealing with the apparent owner as a purchaser or mortgagee, or in any way in which he has an interest in acquiring a valid and unincumbered title in the copyright. Now, here again, we apprehend, that of all kinds of property, copyright is that in respect to which a purchaser must incur least danger of being deceived as to the title to that on which he is advancing his money. Generally speaking, the publisher of a work is informed who is the real owner, because, if the author has dealt with it, by way either of sale or mortgage, the purchaser or mortgagee will, for his own protection, have given immediate notice to the publisher, that he is the party to whom an account is to be rendered. It is true, there may be cases where an author or other owner of a copyright would incumber it, and the incumbrancer might, so long as his interest was duly paid, not give notice of his incumbrance to the publisher; and thus leave it in the power of the mortgagor to defraud a second incumbrancer.

It is obvious, however, that, owing to the very fluctuating value of most literary productions, such cases must be extremely rare; because, none but the most careless of men would be likely to advance money on the security of a literary work, to an amount anything approaching its apparent value, without previously giving notice to the publisher. And, if there be no application to such cases of the equitable doctrine of notice as between several incumbrancers, which, we apprehend, there would not be, as the first incumbrancer would have the legal title, a very short and simple enactment would suffice for applying a remedy to this defect of the present state of the law.

These remarks have been called forth by the perusal of a bill, the promoters of which appear to think that the property in copyright demands a more rigid system of registration than any other class of property*.

* A bill for the Registering of Copyrights and Assignments thereof, and for the better securing the Property therein.—Ordered to be printed 8th February, 1842.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 26, 1842.

RACIST occurrences, of which public notice has been taken in the Legislature, have given some degree of present practical interest to the question, whether one state ought to deliver up to another persons, who, having committed some act criminal by the laws of the second, have escaped thence, and taken refuge in the first.

Of the law of England, as to the particular question arising in the circumstances to which we allude, there never was, we apprehend, any doubt; and if there had been any, there could not remain much after the explicit opinions which have lately fallen from the highest law authorities in the House of Lords. But, on the general question, it is not quite so clear what is the law of nations, and of England, in so far as the former is included within it. Vattel, in the "Treatise on the Law of Nations," thus states his view: "If a criminal escapes, and returns to his own country, justice must be demanded at the hands of his sovereign; and since the latter ought not to permit his subjects to molest the subjects of another sovereign, and, still less, audaciously to offend foreign governments, therefore, he ought to compel the criminal to repair the damage or injury which he has done, if possible; or inflict exemplary punishment upon him; or, lastly, according to the nature of the case and the circumstances, deliver him up to the offended state, in order that it may do justice upon him. This is a tolerably general practice with respect to great crimes, which are equally contrary to the laws providing for security in all states. . . . Murderers, incendiaries, and robbers, are seized everywhere, on the demand of the sovereign in whose territories the crime has been committed, and delivered up to justice. In states which are united by close ties of alliance and amity, the practice goes still farther;" . . . and he goes on to speak of what is actually practised, by arrangement, between such states. (Vattel, book ii. c. 6, ss. 76, 78).

Dr. Story, referring to these passages in Vattel, attributes to that author the opinion, that the surrender of criminals is a matter of strict international right. It is manifest, however, that Vattel is only speaking of the case where the act done is equally a crime in both the States; and that his opinion is to be taken with that qualification, is, we think, plain from the instances that he selects, viz. murder, incendiarism, and theft, crimes of which he speaks, and with truth, as equally contrary to the laws providing for security in all countries.

Grotius also speaks of the rule of surrendering criminals, as obligatory. He says: "Cum vero non solum civitates permittere ut civitas altera armata intra fines suos pœne expetendæ nomine veniat, neque id expediat, sequitur, ut civitas apud quam degit qui culpæ est compertus, alterum facere debeat, aut ut ipsa interpellata pro merito puniat nocentem, aut ut eum permittat arbitrio interpellantis. Hoc enim illud est de dero, quod in historiis sæpius occurrit." (Grot. de Jure Bel. lib. 2, sect. iv. tom. 2, p. 577). And then he goes on to refer to a variety of cases in which persons having committed offences have been delivered up. But he concludes with this proviso: "Quæ omnia tamen sic intelligenda sunt, ut non stricte populus aut rex ad dedendum teneatur, sed, ut diximus, ad dedendum aut puniendum." (Id. sect. iv. p. 578; see also Burlamaqui's Principles, pt. 4, c. 3, sect. 24). Whence, it seems, that Grotius also must have had in view only the cases where the act committed is a crime by the laws of both countries. Were the doctrine, laid down on this point by the two authors cited, not thus limited, it would go the length, in effect, of determining, that a Sovereign ought to punish his subject for an act, for which, by law, he cannot properly be punished.

Voet, on the other hand, citing the practice of the Romans, and contrasting it with that of the nations of Christendom, expresses himself, so as to leave it to be inferred, that he treats the practice of surrender as one of comity, and not of national duty. (Voet de Stat. 358; and see Story's Conflict of Laws, 620).

Puffendorff also, it is said, denies the right of surrender as a matter of right* ; (Burlemaqui, pt. 4, c. 3, sect. 24); and to the same effect are the arguments of Marten. (Law of Nations, book III, cap. 3, sect. 23).

Lord Coke says, "it is holden, and so it hath been resolved, that divided kingdomes under severall kings in league one with another, are sanctuaries for servants, or subjects flying for safety from one kingdom to another, and upon demand made by them, are not by the laws and liberties of kingdomes to be delivered; and this (some say) is grounded upon the Law in Deuteronomy, non trades servum domino sue qui ad te confugerit." (3rd Inst. 180), and he cites a case in 84 Eliz., in which the Queen, demanding from the French king certain of her subjects who had committed treason against her, the French king refused to deliver them up, alleging, that "omnis regna profugis esse libera, regum interesse ut sui quisque regni libertates tueantur." And to this may be added a case referred to by Monsieur Merlin, (Repert. vol. 31, p. 382), where a Florentine, having committed a murder in England, fled to Rome; and being demanded by the King of England, the Roman State refused to deliver him up.

Mr. Chancellor Kent advocates a contrary opinion: "The language," says that eminent judge, "of the authorities is clear and explicit; and the law and usage of nations rest on the plainest principles of justice. It is the duty of the government to surrender up fugitives on demand, after the civil magistrate shall have ascertained the existence of reasonable ground for the charge, and sufficient to put the accused upon his trial. The guilty party cannot be tried and punished by any other jurisdiction than the one whose laws have been violated. Therefore, the duty of surrendering him applies as well to the case of the subjects of the State surrendering, as to the case of subjects of the power demanding the fugitive." (Comm. Vol. 1, p. 37).

But a writer and judge no less eminent, already referred to, after stating this opinion of the American Chancellor, observes, that other distinguished judges and jurists have entertained a different opinion. (Story's Commentaries on the American Constitution, iii. 676).

In our own Courts, there is a case referred to in 4 Taunt. 43, by Heath, J., of the crew of a Dutch ship who had seized the ship and escaped with it to this country, and it was determined that they ought to be sent back to Holland, there to be tried. And there are two old cases, in one of which, Re v. Hutchinson, (3 Keb. 785), the Court refused to bail a man committed on suspicion of a murder in Portugal. The other (Lundy's case, 2 Vent. 314) followed in a more modern one, (Re v. Kimberley, 2 Str. 848), decides that a party may be committed here for a felony in Ireland, in order to be sent over there to be tried. The first case only decides that the prisoner could not be bailed; and the second determines the rule only as between two states, members of the same political body or federation, and not as between states foreign to each other for all purposes.

Such is a very brief outline of the authorities on this intricate subject; and it seems, on reviewing them, rather difficult to coincide in the opinion of Mr. Chancellor Kent, in considering them as clear and explicit, or establishing anything like a settled rule. On the contrary, whatever may be considered a sound and reasonable theory, it is plain, we submit, on the whole, that there is a very considerable conflict, both in the opinions of jurists, and the decisions of tribunals as to what is the law of nations on this point.

It will be found, however, we believe, that, in all the cases put by jurists, as well as those decided by tribunals, in which it has been held, that one state ought to deliver up to another persons who have committed crimes in the territory of the second, the alleged crime has been an act which was a crime by the law of the state delivering up the offender, as well as by the law of the state where the offence was committed. And we have not found any authority for holding, that, by the law of nations, one state is bound to deliver up to another persons who have committed, in the territory of the second, an act criminal by the law of the second, but innocent by the law of the first.

DISTRINGAS ON STOCK.

I. DISTINGAS UNDER THE 5 VICT. c. 5, s. 5.

FOR the purpose of restraining the legal holder of stock from dealing with it to the prejudice of the persons beneficially interested, an injunction, upon a bill filed, has hitherto been the only course that could be pursued in the Court of Chancery; and, before the statute of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, it was necessary to make the Bank a party to the suit. But, in the Court of Exchequer in Equity, a practice had grown up, of effecting the same object by the more commodious, but less familiarly known, proceeding by writ of distringas. This was, in truth, the commencement of a suit against the Bank or other public body having the custody of the stock, being the proper process against a corporation, and founded on a supposed bill of injunction; yet, in point of fact, no bill was actually filed. The writ was served on the Secretary of the Bank, and was accompanied by a notice in writing, signifying that the distringas was intended to prevent the transfer, or the payment of the dividends, of a particular sum of stock standing in the name of the person mentioned and described in the notice. Or the notice might be confined, by the special permission of the Directors, to a certain part only of a particular sum of stock, whenever the circumstances of the case required it; as, for instance, when the stock was standing in the name of an executor or trustee for several cestuis que trust, and the proceedings were instituted by only one of them. After the receipt of this notice, the Bank was restrained from permitting a transfer of the stock, or payment of the dividends, for a limited time, within which a bill might be filed for an injunction. And thus, in the common phraseology, "a stop was put on the stock." It was, however, the usual practice of the Bank to give notice to the party issuing the distringas, that, unless a bill was filed, and an injunction obtained before a certain day, they would permit the transfer. (1 Daniel's Ch. Practice, 202). And it seldom happened that a bill was filed; for, when the object of the equitable owner, of bringing about an arrangement with the legal owner, was attained, no further steps were taken in the matter.

The act "To make further provisions for the Administration of Justice," 5 Vict. c. 5, in abolishing the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer, would have put an end to this practice of proceeding by distringas, which was peculiar to that court, and has been found extensively useful. But the 5th section of that act provides for its continuance in the Court of Chancery, on the same footing as it had obtained in the Court of Exchequer; and enacts, that, in the place of the writ of distringas heretofore issued from the Court of Exchequer, there shall, after the 15th October, 1841, be issuable from the Court of Chancery, and be sealed at the Subpena Office, a writ of distringas, whose force and effect, and the practice under or relating to it, shall be the same as it was in the Court of Exchequer.

A form of the writ of distringas, which is thus issuable out of Chancery, is given in a schedule to the act. And the judges of the Court of Chancery are empowered to frame rules for carrying into effect the adoption of the practice in distringas in that court.

In the exercise of that power, an Order "for regulating the practice of distringas on stock" was issued by the Lord Chancellor, on the 17th of November last. (5 Jur. 1044).

According to the directions of this Order, any person claiming to be interested in stock standing in the name of any other person in the books of the Bank of England, may, by his solicitor, prepare a writ of distringas in the form set out in the schedule to the act, and present it for sealing at the Subpœna Office.

When the writ is presented for sealing, it is to be accompanied by an affidavit by the person applying for the writ, or his solicitor, which, according to the form prescribed by a subsequent Order of the 10th December last, (5 Jur. 1141), is to state, that the party is beneficially interested in the stock, and specify the amount and description of stock, and the person in whose name it is standing. But it need not state a belief of any danger of the stock being dealt with prejudicially to the party's interest.

The writ is to be served upon the Bank with the same kind of notice as was usual with regard to the Exchequer writ, and is to have the same force in restraining a transfer, or payment of dividends. But it is not to remain in force, without the order of the court, for more than eight days after a request from the party in whose name the stock is standing, for a transfer or payment of the dividends.

The writ may be discharged, as of course, on the petition of the party on whose behalf it was issued; or on the application, by motion or notice, or by petition, duly served, of any other person claiming to be interested in the stock; with such costs to be paid by the party applying for the discharge, as the court shall award.

The Order also contains other regulations relating to the fees and costs.

The Order particularizes only stock transferable at the Bank of England, being that with which the practice of distringas, in the Court of Exchequer, was most commonly conversant. But the proceeding by distringas, like the proceeding by injunction under the statute of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, is applicable, it is believed, to the funds in the management of the South Sea Company, as well as to those under the control of the Bank. We are not aware that it has ever been attempted to be employed with regard to interests in the stock or share of any other corporate companies. But sect. 4 of the 5 Vict. c. 5, invests the Court of Chancery with the administration of a summary process, having a similar purpose, with respect to the stock or shares of any public company. For it enacts, "That on and after the said 15th day of October, 1841, it shall be lawful for the Court of Chancery, upon the application of any party interested, by motion or petition, in a summary way, without bill filed, to restrain the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or any other public company, whether incorporated or not, from permitting the transfer of any stock in the public funds, or any stock or shares in any public company, which may be standing in the name or names of any person or persons, or body politic or corporate, in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or in the books of any such public company, or from paying any dividend or dividends due or to become due thereon." And this mode of proceeding is assimilated as far as may be to the practice in distringas. The order made by the Court of Chancery upon such motion or petition, is to specify the amount of the stock, or the particular shares which it is intended to affect, and the person in whose name they are standing; and the court has power, upon the application of any party interested, to discharge or vary the order, and to award costs upon such application, as the court shall think proper.

II. CHARGING ORDER, OPERATING AS A DISTRINGAS, UNDER THE 1 & 2 VICT. c. 110, s. 14.

The stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, in the furtherance of its purpose of enlarging the remedies of creditors against the property of their debtors, has furnished a judgment creditor with the means of obtaining satisfaction for his debt out of a species of property, which he could neither take in execution at law, nor attach in equity. The 14th section of that act enables him to lay hold of the funded property of his debtor, by a mode of proceeding that resembles a distringas in some of its results and practical details. It enacts, "That, if any person against whom any judgment shall have been entered up in any of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster, shall have any government stock, funds, or annuities, or any stock or shares of or in any public company in England, (whether incorporated or not), standing in his name in his own right, or in the name of any person in trust for him, it shall be lawful for a judge of one of the superior courts, on the application of any judgment creditor, to order that such stock, funds, annuities, or shares, or such of them, or such part thereof respectively as he shall think fit, shall stand charged with the payment of the amount for which judgment shall have been so recovered, and interest thereon; and such order shall entitle the judgment creditor to all such remedies as he would have been entitled to, if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment debtor."

In considering the nature of the "charging order" introduced by this enactment, we may inquire, firstly, upon whose application the order may be obtained; secondly, by whom it may be made; thirdly, to what property it may extend; fourthly, its effects as a distringas; and, fifthly, the mode of proceeding in obtaining and enforcing it.

1. The order is to be obtained upon the application of a judgment creditor. And the judgment upon which a creditor may proceed may, it seems, be a judgment entered up before the passing of the act, as well as after, conformably to the express enactments, on that point, of the 11th and 13th sections. And it is to be remembered, that, according to the 18th section, the term "judgments" here includes "all decrees and orders of courts of equity, and all rules and orders of courts of common law, whereby any sum of money, or any costs, charges, or expenses, shall be payable;" and that the persons to whom any such monies, &c., shall be payable, shall be deemed judgment creditors within the meaning of the act, and be entitled to all remedies thereby given to judgment creditors.

2. The order is to be made by a judge of one of the superior courts of common law.

In cases where stock was standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, the Vice-Chancellor, at an early period after the passing of the act, made some orders of this kind, charging such stock for the benefit of a judgment creditor. But, in Miles v. Presland, (2 Beav. 300; 4 My. & C. 431), a defendant being entitled to a fifth share of certain stock, standing in the name of the Accountant-General to the credit of the cause, a creditor, who had obtained judgment against him in the Exchequer of Pleas, applied to the Master of the Rolls, under the 14th section, for an order nisi to charge the defendant's fifth share of the fund with the amount of the judgment debt. But his Lordship, conceiving that he had no authority to make the order, requested that the motion might be made before the Lord Chancellor. And Lord Cottenham, when the matter was accordingly brought before him, stated, that, after having consulted with the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor, they were all of opinion, that the judges of the Court of Chancery had no jurisdiction to make orders upon judgments, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, and that the application should be made to one of the common law judges. His Lordship added, that though the Vice-Chancellor had made such orders, his Honor's attention had not at the time been called to the objection. In consequence of this decision, a charging order, obtained from the Vice-Chancellor in the case of Hulkes v. Day, (4 Jur. 1125, 10 Sim. 41), was discharged on the application of the debtor; and another order of the same kind was subsequently obtained by the creditor from a judge of the Court of Exchequer.

In these cases, the judgment was a judgment obtained in a court of common law; but with respect to decrees and orders of the courts of equity for the payment of money, &c., that are to have the force of judgments under the 18th section, that section, after enacting, that the persons to whom such money, &c., shall be payable under such orders, "shall be deemed judgment creditors within the meaning of this act," proceeds to provide, "that all powers hereby given to the judges of the superior courts of common law, with respect to matters depending in the same courts, shall and may be exercised by courts of equity with respect to matters therein depending. It would appear, therefore, that a charging order for the benefit of the person entitled to the money under the decree or order for payment, should be made by a judge of a court of equity.

3. The property that may be charged by an order of this kind is described in the act, as "any government stock, funds, or annuities, or any stock or shares of or in any public company in England, (whether incorporated or not)."

The stock, &c., may be either "standing in the name of the debtor in his own right, or in the name of any person in trust for him." Soon after the passing of the act a doubt was raised, whether, under this clause, stock could be charged in which the debtor had only a partial interest; and whether the construction of its terms must not be governed by that put on similar expressions in the Statute of Frauds, (see Dee v. Greenhill, 3 B. & Ald. 684), so as to be held to apply only to simple trusts for the debtor alone, and not to trusts where the stock is standing in the name of a trustee for several persons having partial interests. But there is this material distinction to be observed between the cases, that, in those relating to the creditor's remedy against the debtor's lands under the Statute of Frauds, the partial interest, subject to which the debtor was entitled, materially interfered with the possession to be delivered under the debt; while, on the contrary, the nature of an equitable charge is capable of being accommodated to every degree and modification of interest, and, as such, is made available, not only against funded property, under the 14th section, but also, under the 13th section of the act, for the purpose of binding those partial and reversionary and other interests in real property that cannot be taken in execution. The doubt, however, is now entirely removed by the stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, which extends the provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, "to the interest of any judgment debtor, whether in possession, remainder, or reversion, and whether vested or contingent, as well in any stocks, funds, or shares, as also in the dividends, interest, or annual produce of such stocks, &c." It was also doubted, whether the power of a judge to make a charging order of this kind applied to the case of stock standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery. But this doubt, also, is removed by the same explanatory statute, declaring, that it shall be lawful for a judge of any of the superior courts of law to make such order, as to stock, &c., standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, or the interest and dividends thereof, in the same way as if the same were standing in the name of a trustee for the judgment debtor. But the order in such a case shall not operate to prevent a transfer, or payment of the dividends, by direction of the Court of Chancery.

The construction of this part of the statute of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, both independently of the subsequent declaratory act, and as explained by its assistance, was much discussed in the case of Hulkes v. Day, already referred to. In that case, the defendant was entitled to certain sums of stock, standing in the name of the Accountant-General to his separate account, and had mortgaged them; and a person who had recovered judgment in an action against him, in May, 1840, obtained an order from Mr. Baron Rolfe, under the 14th section, charging the stock with the payment of the sum for which judgment had been recovered. Upon a petition by the creditor to the Vice-Chancellor, for a subsidiary stop-order on the fund, it was contended, on the part of the debtor: firstly, that the act of the 1 & 2 Vict. did not apply to stock in which any other person besides the judgment debtor had an interest; and, secondly, that stock standing in the name of the Accountant-General was not within that act; and that the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, which passed on the 7th August, 1840, had no retrospective operation, so as to remove these objections. In giving judgment upon this case, the Vice-Chancellor said: "Before the second act passed, I had occasion to speak to the Lord Chancellor on the subject of the first act, and I distinctly understood from his Lordship, that it was the intention of the legislature, that any order, which should have the effect of making a charge on stock standing in the name of the Accountant-General, should be made, not by a judge of this court, but by a judge of one of the courts of law; but the Lord Chancellor never expressed a doubt that the judges of the courts of common law might make orders which should charge stock standing in the name of the Accountant-General, in which the party sought to be charged had any interest; and it is very clear to me, that, if there was any such doubt, it is removed by the subsequent act, which does both declare and define what shall be the construction of the former act." After distinguishing the case of Dee v. Greenhill, which had been cited, his Honor continued: "It seems to me, that, in a case where the Accountant-General holds a fund in trust for A. and other persons, he is a trustee for A. and those other persons; and, if A.'s interest in the fund is subject to a charge, I see no reason why that circumstance should prevent an order being made, under the act, to charge the fund." But, on this point as well as the other, his Honor thought the act, being a statutory explanation of the first, had a retrospective operation. Supposing, however, that the act had a retrospective effect, it had been contended that the order of Mr. Baron Rolfe was erroneous, because it charged the stock generally, and not the debtor's interest in the stock, with the judgment debt. But Sir L. Shadwell was of opinion, that, though the debtor had not an exclusive interest in the fund, and the order was void as to a party who had a prior interest in the fund, it would, nevertheless, extend to the interest which he had; and the stop-order was granted, the mortgagees of the fund being excepted out of it.

An order, therefore, may be made, charging any interest of the debtor in the stock, though it be partial only, and either joint, particular, or reversionary; and the order may charge either the corpus of the stock, or the dividends only; and it may comprehend the whole of a certain sum of stock belonging to the debtor, or be confined to a part only, so as to adapt the extent of the charge to the amount of the debt; and it will not be defeated by a mortgage of the fund previously made by the debtor, but will take effect subject to the prior incumbrance. For this is agreeable to the terms of the act, which places the judgment creditor in the same situation exactly, and invests him with the same remedies, as if the charge had been made in his favour by the debtor himself.

According to the obvious construction of the clause, its provisions apply to stock vested in the debtor, not at the time when the judgment is entered up, but at the date of the order. The debtor, therefore, may defeat the creditor's remedy, by selling the stock at any time before an order is obtained.

4. In order to prevent the judgment debtor from disposing of the stock, &c., so as to defeat the creditor's remedy, the charging order is, in the first instance, to be made ex parte, and without notice to the debtor, and is an order to shew cause only; and till the order is made absolute, or discharged, it shall operate in the way of a distringas to restrain the Bank or the public company from permitting a transfer; or, if after notice of the order they permit a transfer, will render them liable to the judgment creditor to the amount of the property so charged and transferred; and no disposition of the judgment debtor in the meantime will be valid against the judgment creditor.

It is observable, that, though the words "government stock, funds, or annuities," are undoubtedly applicable to stock transferable at the South Sea House, as well as at the Bank, the Bank alone is expressly mentioned in the part of the 15th section of the act relating to the distringas. Nor do the general expressions there used seem adapted to include the government stock in the hands of the South Sea Company.

If the stock is standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, that court will grant a stop-order on the stock as auxiliary to a charging order by a common law judge, during the interval of the six months to elapse between the charging order and any proceedings to make the charge effectual. (Hulkes v. Day, 4 Jur. 1125, 10 Sim. 41).

5. With the view of obtaining a charging order, the nature and particulars of the property which it is proposed to charge should, in the first case, be ascertained; and, upon an affidavit, stating the circumstances of the judgment, and the amount and description of the stock intended to be charged, and the name of the person in which it is standing, an order nisi will be made upon application to a judge at chambers. The order is to be served immediately upon the Secretary of the Bank, or upon the acting officer of the Company, according to the nature of the property to which it relates; and, afterwards, notice of the order is to be given to the judgment debtor, by service of a copy of it upon him or his attorney.

If the judgment debtor, having been served with notice of the order, shall not, within the time, or on the day, mentioned in the order, shew sufficient cause to the contrary, the order may be made absolute. Or, sufficient cause being shewn, it may be discharged on his application; as it may, likewise, on the application of any other party interested in the stock, as a trustee or another cestui que trust.

In preparing the affidavit on which an order is to be founded for charging a partial interest, care should be taken accurately to specify the amount, as well of the whole sum of stock, as of the part or share in which the judgment debtor is beneficially interested. In a case where the charge was, in the first instance, too extensive, being applied to the whole of a sum of stock standing in the name of a trustee, and the judgment debtor was only one of several cestuis que trust, the order was discharged, and confined to an amount commensurate with the interest of the debtor. (Willesford v. —, Wilkinson, Law of Stock, 245). We have seen, however, (Hulkes v. Day, ubi sup.), that the Vice-Chancellor did not consider an order was absolutely invalidated by reason of its not being restricted to the actual interest of the judgment debtor in the property; but though void, in such a case, as to a party having a prior or partial interest, and incorrect in its form, it might be effectual to the extent of the actual share or interest of the debtor.

The effect of the order, when made absolute, will be the same (but no other or greater) as if the debtor had himself charged the stock or dividends, in favour of the judgment creditor, with the amount of the sum mentioned in the order. (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1). But no proceedings are to be taken to have the benefit of the charge until after the expiration of six calendar months from the date of the charging order. It will, however, be valid against the bankruptcy or insolvency of the debtor in the meantime.

If the creditor, after obtaining an order of this kind, takes the debtor's person in execution, he will lose the benefit of the charge. B.

NOTICE TO TRUSTEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE JURIST.

Sir,—Until the decision in the case of Jones v. Jones, (8 Sim. 683), upon which you have commented in a recent number of THE JURIST, I had always understood, in common, I believe, with some conveyancers of eminence, that the salutary doctrine of Dearle v. Hall, &c., applied to real as much as to personal estate; and the alarm and regret with which I witnessed the Vice-Chancellor of England's attempt to confine that doctrine to personal estate have not been diminished by your able advocacy of his Honor's opinion. As the subject is of considerable importance, and as, whatever may be your opinion with regard to the actual state of the law, you will probably agree, that it is very desirable to place equitable interests in real estate on the same advantageous footing with similar interests in personalty, I am induced to trespass upon your attention, by endeavouring to shew, that his Honor's doctrine is at least open to objection, if not, indeed, directly contradicted by principle and authority.

It may be as well, in the first place, to relieve the argument from the weight which is generally attributed to Jones v. Jones, as a decision on the point; but to which an examination of the circumstances will shew that it is not entitled. The property in dispute in that case consisted of a legal remainder in fee-simple devised to Eliza Whitworth, and a legal estate for life devised to her by another testator*. Eliza Whitworth married F. L. Brown, and, by her marriage-settlement, conveyed her remainder in fee to such uses as she and her husband should jointly appoint. This settlement was intrusted to the keeping of William Jones, the solicitor to the parties. The Browns afterwards demised the life estate and appointed the remainder in fee to William Jones by way of mortgage, and subsequently joined in a transfer of the mortgage and a further charge to Jane James, a client of William Jones, who left the deeds in his hands as solicitor. The Browns then made a mortgage of both estates to John Jones, without disclosing the former charges, or anything beyond the wills and the settlement. Lastly, the Browns executed a mortgage of the two estates to John Harris, disclosing the mortgage to Jane James, but concealing the subsequent mortgage to John Jones; and Harris caused a notice of his mortgage to be indorsed on the settlement. Now, it is obvious that these circumstances did not raise the question in Dearle v. Hall; the doctrine of which case is shortly this: that where a person has an equitable interest of such a nature that he cannot make out a title at all, without shewing that the legal title is outstanding in a trustee, every one dealing with that interest is bound to inform the trustee of his dealings, in order that parties to whom it may subsequently be offered, may have it in their power to ascertain the existing charges upon it. In Jones v. Jones, the title which was made out to John Jones was a legal title in the Browns themselves; and he was not aware even of the mortgage to Jane James. There was no trustee to whom he could give notice. The notice indorsed on the settlement by Harris was not notice to any trustee of the property; nor was it any effectual protection against fraud by the Browns; for the settlement might have been suppressed, or the notice erased, without any fear of detection. The Vice-Chancellor, however, considered that the case fell within the doctrine of Dearle v. Hall, if that doctrine could be extended to real estate; and he held that it could not be so extended. Now if, as is incontestable, the circumstances of Jones v. Jones did not raise the question, his Honor's judgment amounted to a mere extrajudicial dictum; and even as such, is not entitled to the weight which is in most cases justly attributed to opinions from the bench, because it bears internal evidence of having been pronounced under a misapprehension of the very doctrine which it professes to limit.

The doctrine of Dearle v. Hall was, no doubt, borrowed from the enactments in the Bankrupt Acts against reputed ownership, (with which, however, it has no necessary connection), and hence the frequent reference in the cases on that doctrine to personal chattels and choses in action. Sir T. Plumer relied very much on the dicta of the common law and equity judges in the great bankruptcy case of Ryall v. Rowles, (1 Ves. sen. 371, 1 Atk. 182). Indeed the opportunities for the application of the doctrine are of much more frequent occurrence under titles to personal than to real property, for the obvious reason, that merely equitable titles to real estate are not common, except in the form of equities of redemption; and then they are often cloaked with a fictitious legal title, which excludes the doctrine in question. But in cases which have fairly come within the principle of Dearle v. Hall, I believe it can be shewn, that the doctrine of that case has actually been held to apply to real estate.

That there is nothing in the principle of the doctrine to confine it to personal estate, I conceive needs little argument. At the conclusion of the argument in Dearle v. Hall, Sir T. Plumer's language was as follows:—"The plaintiffs had been negligent, and, in consequence of their negligence, third parties had been involved in transactions which could not have taken place, if the first purchasers, by omitting to communicate their claims to the legal owners of the fund, had not put it out of the power of those legal owners, though acting with perfect fairness and honesty, to represent to the subsequent purchaser the true state of the circumstances. Where a purchaser, by his negligence, places a subsequent purchaser who has acted with all due caution, in such a situation that loss must fall either upon the one or the other, he who has been in default, and has caused the mischief, ought not to be saved harmless at the expense of an innocent party."

These are equitable reasons of the most general application that can be imagined; and cannot, on any rational ground, be confined to one particular species of property. In his subsequent judgment, Sir T. Plumer enlarged upon this topic, and mainly relied on it in support of his decision; at the same time introducing the notion, which has since been so much insisted on, of completing the equitable title. But I prefer quoting the concise summary of the grounds of Sir T. Plumer's judgment, given by Lord Lyndhurst in the House of Lords, (in the case of Foster v. Cockerell, 3 Cl. & Fin. 475): "The reason on which his Honor adopted that principle, as the rule for his decision, seems to have been, that, if a contrary doctrine was allowed to prevail, it would enable a cestui que trust to commit a fraud by enabling him to assign his interest, first to one, and then to a second incumbrancer; and perhaps, indeed, to a great many more; and these latter incumbrancers would have no opportunity of ascertaining, by any communication with the trustees, whether or not there had been a prior assignment of the interest on the security of which they were relying for provision for their claims. Another principle acted upon by the Master of the Rolls was, that a party, till he gave notice to the trustees, had not done every thing that was necessary to complete his title. I fully agree with that principle. In a case of this sort, it is necessary that a party, claiming advantage from a title, should do every thing that is requisite to complete that title, before he sets up a claim in respect of it. The Master of the Rolls was also of opinion, that the trustees themselves were entitled to notice on their own account; and that, till notice was given to the trustees, they did not, in fact, become trustees for the assignee."

So far from these grounds pointing exclusively at personal property, they have a more especial reference to the old established maxims of the law, in regard to realty. What is the object proposed by the rule? Publicity and the prevention of secret alienations. And what but that same end was contemplated in the old feudal requisites of livery of seisin and entry, or attornment, as essential to the transfer of every interest in land? At the common law no title to real property could be completed without the knowledge of every party concerned in interest. What is the foundation of the whole doctrine of getting in outstanding terms, but this very notion of "completing the title?" If you purchase an estate and take an assignment of an outstanding term, you appropriate the benefit of it. If you make the old trustee a party to your conveyance, you equally appropriate the benefit of it; but, if you merely declare in your conveyance that all terms shall attend your estate, and have no dealings with the trustees of them, you gain no advantage over a later claimant. The term must be got in in some sense, said Lord Eldon, in Maundrell v. Maundrell, (10 Ves. 271), either by taking an assignment, making the trustee a party to the instrument, or taking possession of the deed creating the term. If these means are sufficient, as Lord Eldon has repeatedly laid it down that they are, to entitle a purchaser to the benefit of an outstanding legal estate, which he does not clothe himself with, the very point, as it seems to me, is determined; and we may assert, on the authority of Lord Eldon, that an equitable incumbrancer on real estate may, by merely giving notice to a trustee of the legal estate, gain priority over a former incumbrancer who has neglected to do so, and of whose charge neither party has any notice.

The language of Sir J. Wigram, V. C., in his recent and elaborate judgment in the case of Meus v. Bell, (1 Hare, 83; 6 Jur. 123), although, with that caution which always accompanies great judicial abilities, his Honor carefully follows the language of former authorities, seems to be strongly confirmatory of this view. The question being, in what manner the notice should be given, his Honor observed, "If the trustee has actual knowledge at the time the transaction takes place, I have always understood the principle of law to be, that what a man knows for one purpose he knows for all; and you do not inquire whether he learnt it in one character or in another." And with reference to the case of Timson v. Ramsbottom, (2 Kee. 35), where Lord Langdale, M. R., held that notice to one of two executors was insufficient as against an incumbrancer who took his charge after the death of that executor; although, in Smith v. Smith, (2 C. & M. 231), notice to one of two trustees, who was living when the second transaction took place, was held sufficient, Sir J. Wigram, V. C., said, "Having got rid of the technical objection, that notice to one is notice to all, the question was reduced to this: at the time when the second incumbrancer took his security, was there any person living who had notice of the prior incumbrance being created?" Again, "The reason why notice to one has been held sufficient is, because nothing less than inquiry of all the trustees would satisfy a prudent inquirer." Nothing can be more opposed than this to the notion that there is any technical efficacy in thus "completing the title" to a fund, independently of the equitable merit of protecting after-comers. If there are three trustees, X., Y. and Z., and A. gives notice to X., and then B., a second incumbrancer, gives notice to Y. and Z., it is clear, upon the authorities, that B. would be postponed, although he had done more towards "completing his title" than A.

I am not aware of any cases antecedent to Dearle v. Hall that are opposed to the extension of the doctrine to real estate; but if any such could be found, they would not, I conceive, be admissible as authorities at the present day; because the doctrine, even as to personalty, was never recognised, until Sir T. Plumer established it in that case. In Wright v. Lord Dorchester, (3 Russ. 492), Lord Eldon thought the point too doubtful to be decided on an interlocutory application. In Cooper v. Plummer, (3 Russ. 60), Sir T. Plumer himself actually decided against the claim of a party who had given notice to the trustees of a personal fund; and in Tourville v. Naish, (3 P. W. 307), Lord Talbot also decided in direct opposition to what is now the law. In the last-mentioned case, one of two executors, who was also residuary legatee, assigned a part of his legacy to A., and then assigned the whole of his interest to his co-executor, who had no notice of the prior disposition. Lord Talbot held that A. had priority, although it is now settled that, where the alienee of the fund is also one of the trustees, no further notice is necessary; (Ex parte Smart, 2 Mont. & Ayr. 60); but, on the other hand, if the owner of the fund is one of the trustees, the notice which he has is ineffectual. (Ex parte M'Turk, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 1).

The case of Peacock v. Burt, before Lord Cottenham when Master of the Rolls, (13 Law J. 35), has been cited on both sides of the question, although I cannot see that it throws much light on either. In that case, A. made a legal mortgage to B.; he then mortgaged to C., who had notice of B.'s mortgage, and gave him notice of her own. Lastly, A. obtained an advance from D. on the security of the estate, D. paying off B., and taking a conveyance of the legal estate from him, without being informed of C.'s charge. The question was, not whether B. should be answerable to C. for concealing her claim, but whether D. could be deprived of the benefit of the actual legal estate; and the Master of the Rolls of course held that he could not. "The third mortgagee," said that distinguished judge, "who is, to all intents and purposes, a purchaser for valuable consideration, being without notice, is entitled to the full benefit of his legal rights and remedies. It has been supposed, that the cases of Dearle v. Hall, &c., determine the point; but, in my opinion, the decision in these cases proceeded on different principles; they merely decided, that, as between parties having equities only, he who first gives notice obtains priority; and this is apparent when we look at the grounds on which those cases were decided. Sir T. Plumer proceeded on the principle, that it was not possible to transfer the legal interest; and that, whenever it is intended to complete the transfer of a chose in action, there is a mode of dealing with it which a court of equity considers tantamount to possession, namely, notice given to the legal depository of the fund. 'The question here is,' says his Honor, 'not which assignment is first in date, but whether there is not, on the part of Hall, a better title to call for the legal estate,' [almost the very words used by Lord Eldon, with reference to real estate]. So, again, Lord Lyndhurst, in affirming the judgment of Sir T. Plumer, states, as a reason for coming to the same conclusion, that the act of giving the trustee notice was, in a certain degree, taking possession of the fund; and that it was going as far towards equitable possession as it was possible to go. So that those cases, as far as they apply, are very strong decisions in favour of D.; for they decide, that a second incumbrancer without notice, having obtained a quasi legal title in a chose in action, gains a priority over the prior incumbrancer. Here D. has the actual legal estate." The point in Peacock v. Burt was different from that in Dearle v. Hall, &c.; but how could those cases be in favour of D.'s claim, if the principles of equity as to personal choses did not apply to real estate? If those cases were inapplicable to real estate, would not the Master of the Rolls have said so, instead of striving to distinguish the circumstances from those before him? An equitable title to land is just as much a chose in action as an equitable title to money. In Foster v. Cockerell, the rule was applied to a fund charged on real estate; so that the doctrine in Jones v. Jones must be carried to this extent,—that, if an equitable owner mortgages to A. and then to B., B. can gain no priority by giving notice; but if A. mortgages his charge (which is personalty) to C., and then to D., C. may be postponed by D.'s notice, and yet the property in question in both cases is identical!

It only remains to examine the arguments of the Vice-Chancellor in Jones v. Jones, as they are to be collected from the report. His Honor is reported to have said, that, according to Peacock v. Burt, the notice in that case was of no value. Now, it is evident that Lord Cottenham did consider the notice to be of value, but of less value than the actual legal estate. His Honor then cited the observation of Lord Eldon in Hiern v. Mill, (13 Ves. 114), that, "There is a marked distinction between a real estate and a personal chattel. The latter is held by possession, a real estate, by title." But that remark was merely made to shew, that a vendor's possession of an estate should not induce a purchaser to shut his eyes to circumstances, such as the absence of the deeds, which might lead to a discovery of outstanding rights; although the possession of a personal chattel is a good prima facie title. But what has this to do with equitable titles, where there is no possession? Peter v. Russell, (2 Vern. 726); Beckett v. Cordley, (1 B. C. C. 353); Evans v. Bicknell, (6 Ves. 174); Martinez v. Cooper, (2 Russ. 214), and the other cases of that class, where the neglect of leaving the title deeds in the hands of the mortgagor, unaccompanied by any fraudulent intention, was held insufficient to postpone a mortgagee, were all cases where the mortgagee had the legal estate*; and, besides, are not a little shaken by the decision in Whitbread v. Jordan, (2 You. & C. 303). In the only case where the question arose between merely equitable incumbrancers, the party neglecting to secure the deeds was postponed, although no fraud was imputed to him. (Stanhope v. Earl Verney, 2 Eden, 81; Butl. n. Co. Litt. 290. b.).

Upon the whole, I believe it will be found that this question, if not actually concluded by authority against the dictum in Jones v. Jones, is at least not settled the other way; and, therefore, until it shall be so determined, prudence, as well as an honest wish to prevent fraud, will dictate the propriety of giving notice in every case of an incumbrance upon an equitable interest, without regard to its nature. The caution given by Sir T. Plumer in the principal case should not be forgotten: "A solicitor neglecting to give notice, would find it difficult to make out that he had not become responsible to his client."

I trust that the importance of the subject will be an excuse for the length of this communication, and am, Sir, &c. G. S.

* "The question here," said Sir T. Plumer, in Dearle v. Hall, "is not, as in Evans v. Bicknell, whether a Court of Equity is to deprive the plaintiffs of any right; whether it is taken from them, for instance, a legal estate, or to impose any charge upon them. It is simply whether they are entitled to relief against their own negligence."

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, Feb. 21.

Lord Campbell postponed his Bill for improving the Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, till Tuesday, the 1st of March.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, Feb. 21.

On the motion of Mr. Godson, the Copyright Registration Bill was read a second time. The Bill to be committed after Easter.

Sir James Graham moved for and obtained leave to bring in a Bill to explain the Law relating to Masters and Apprentices. It appeared doubtful, by a recent decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, whether magistrates had any jurisdiction to interfere between masters and apprentices, where no premium had been paid. The object of the Bill would be to give to the magistrates jurisdiction in such cases.

Thursday, Feb. 24.

Lord Mahon gave notice of motion (for Thursday next) for leave to bring in a Bill relative to the Law of Copyright, which would be nearly identical in its provisions with that brought in in the last Parliament by Serjeant Talfourd.

LONDON, MARCH 5, 1842.

THE debate in the House of Lords of the 1st instant (see the Parliamentary intelligence, post, p. 76) has put us in possession of Lord Campbell's ideas for the improvement of the appellate jurisdiction of the House of Lords, which involve, as will be seen, the destruction of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the emancipation of the Court of Chancery. We need not remind our readers, that it is only a few months since the Legislature, after frequent inquiries and discussions, passed an Act for increasing the judicial strength of the Court of Chancery, satisfied, as we must presume, that such an increase of strength was desirable for the administration of justice. But, at this day, when a reform in the law, a few years old, is already thought to be waxing into the decrepitude of a rusty antiquity, it may be proper to remind our readers, that the present constitution of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has reached the alarming age of not less than eight years and a half; and that, therefore, it must necessarily have become so encumbered with abuses, and must so completely have ceased to be adequate to the wants of an advanced state of civilization, as to render its abolition a measure of high expediency.

Lord Campbell proposes, as we collect from what is reported to have fallen from him, to abolish the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as a Court of appeal, and to transfer all its appeal jurisdiction to the House of Lords. He proposes, in order to meet this accumulation of judicial business, to take the Lord Chancellor out of the Court of Chancery, and confine him, as a judicial person, to the House of Lords; and he proposes to supply his place in the Court of Chancery by a permanent presiding Judge in equity, whom he recommends to be taken from among the existing Vice-Chancellors.

The groundwork of this wholesale substitutional process is, as we understand his Lordship, the defect of the existing constitution of the Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords. But on what ground the improvement of that jurisdiction appears to him only attainable through the destruction of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, we profess ourselves wholly unable to comprehend. His Lordship states, indeed, that there are now two Courts of Appeal of co-ordinate Jurisdiction, meaning, we suppose, the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and he states, further, his individual opinion, that there ought to be but one Supreme Court of Appeal; and then, assuming these two positions to be correct, without further proof or reasoning, he determines, that, if one of the two Courts of Appeal is to be abolished, the Judicial Committee is the one that must perish. We conceive, with great submission, however, to an individual, even so learned and so deservedly eminent as the late Lord Chancellor of Ireland, that something of proof is wanting before men's minds will be satisfied of the expediency of proceeding to the abolition of a Tribunal which has existed in some form for more than three centuries; and which has been entirely reformed and adapted by the Legislature to the wants of modern times, only so far back as 1833.

We would first ask, what is meant by "two Courts of Appeal of co-ordinate Jurisdiction?" By those terms, we should have supposed would be understood two Courts holding their jurisdiction in the same right; alike in constitution; administering the same law; and sitting in appeal on causes brought from the same inferior jurisdiction; in fine, we should have supposed, that Courts of similar jurisdiction in all or most respects, must have been meant.

That, however, cannot have been the meaning of the noble and learned Lord, because, in fact, the House of Lords and the Judicial Committee do not bear that sort of relation one to the other. The House of Lords is an independent Court of Appeal, in right of its being the Assembly of the Peers of Parliament. Whatever may be the extent of its jurisdiction in theory, it is quite clear, that, in practice, it only exercises jurisdiction on appeals from the subordinate Courts of Law and Equity.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, on the contrary, confines its jurisdiction to appeals from the Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Courts, and from the Colonial dominions of the Crown. The House of Lords has jurisdiction to determine, as well as to hear and inquire. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has only power to hear and inquire, and does not determine, but only advises the Crown. The appeal to the House of Lords is to the Lords, as an independent body of judges; the appeal to the Privy Council is to the Queen in council. In fact, the House of Lords is a distinct and independent Court of Appeal in matters which, by the laws of the land, are originally heard by some of the judges appointed by the Crown to administer those laws; while the Judicial Committee is merely a council using judicial forms of procedure, for the purpose of ascertaining and advising the Crown upon the law, in appeals from jurisdictions, over which the Crown is itself the judge of last resort. Two tribunals more thoroughly distinct, both in theory and practice, it is hardly possible to conceive. That they should come into actual conflict on the same case, as suggested by Lord Campbell, seems scarcely possible. And, though it must be admitted that they might come into conflict on matter of law in different cases, involving the same point of law, yet, unless the decision of the one court happens to be unknown to the other, even that case of conflict is not very probable, as, unquestionably, either of those high tribunals would pay great attention to the deliberate decision of the other. The fact appears to be, according to the statement of the Lord Chancellor, that there has been no instance of a conflict of decision between the Privy Council and the House of Lords.

But suppose the proposition to be carried into effect, and the jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee transferred to the House of Lords;—how is it there to be exercised? The House of Lords usually comprises among its members a certain number of Lords learned in the Law of England, and, perhaps, of Scotland; but it very rarely counts among its number any noble Lord learned in the Ecclesiastical Law, or in those Foreign Laws which are in force in many of our Colonies. In order to adjudicate upon the variety of codes which govern the cases coming before it as a Court of universal Appeal, it would, therefore, be obliged continually to call to its assistance, as advisers, persons learned in those laws. It may be said, why should not the House of Lords call to its assistance the Judges of other Courts as well as the Judges of the Common Law? But the answer is, that it would be objectionable if the highest Court of Appeal were under the necessity of continually calling to advise it any foreign assistance. The Judges are not in practice required to assist the House of Lords except on matters of law of great importance, and on which there is the highest degree of doubt; cases necessarily of rare occurrence. In by far the major part of the causes heard by the House of Lords, possessing, as they do, in their own body almost at all times, one or more common-law Judges, they neither require, nor, in fact, make use of any foreign assistance.

It would be otherwise, we apprehend, if they became a Court of Appeal from all the various jurisdictions from which an appeal now lies to the Judicial Committee. And we doubt much, whether the dignity of the House, or the authority of its judgments, would be greatly increased by the circumstance of its being seen habitually to lean upon the assistance of other Judges in the execution of its high judicial functions.

On the remaining parts of Lord Campbell's plan, we shall not, at present, offer any lengthened remarks. Neither the proposal for withdrawing the Lord Chancellor from the Court of Chancery, nor that for appointing a permanent Chief Judge in Equity are, in themselves, new; though, undoubtedly, it is new, to propose these measures within so very short a period from the time when the Legislature has attempted to apply a specific remedy to the evils alleged to arise from the Lord Chancellor being overburthened with judicial labour.

From the adverse opinions expressed by all the learned Lords who spoke in the debate on this subject, we may collect, perhaps, that Lord Campbell's measure will be unlikely to reach an advanced stage; should it, however, do so, we shall endeavour to lay before our readers the details of bills, which, whether they shall turn out to be improvements or not, will, at any rate, go to effect the greatest changes in the administration of the law that we have yet seen.

RULES OF COURT, &c., EQUIVALENT TO JUDGMENTS

UNDER THE 1 & 2 VICT. c. 110, s. 18.

The statute of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, while it abolishes arrest on mesne process, leaves the superior courts in the possession and exercise of their power of attaching the person for a contempt committed by disobedience to their orders. But, at the same time, its 18th section gives to rules or orders of court, for the payment of money and costs, the effect and all the force of a judgment, so as to enable the party, to whom the money and costs are payable, to take out execution thereon against the real and personal property of the party by whom they are ordered to be paid. And thus, in those cases particularly in which the process by attachment was most frequently resorted to, in enforcing awards for the payment of money, and orders of court for the payment of costs, a more direct and efficacious remedy is provided, which seems likely to be preferably adopted, and will, perhaps, entirely supersede the other. It has even sometimes been doubted, whether the proceeding by attachment for the non-payment of money, pursuant to a rule of court, has not been virtually abolished by the 18th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which, giving the power of enforcing such rules by execution against the property, has, consequently, rendered it unnecessary to have recourse to an attachment. It might, however, have been intended, that the remedy given by the statute should be cumulative, and be available alternately with that at common law. And the courts, notwithstanding the doubt, have continued to grant attachments in such cases; particularly while it remained a question, how far, and in what manner, the process under the statute was applicable to the purpose of enforcing the payment of money awarded by an arbitrator. But now that this question appears to be satisfactorily settled, it is probable, that the process by attachment, even for the non-performance of such awards, will more and more fall into disuse, when brought practically into comparison with the more convenient and effectual means provided by the statute.

The rules of the courts of common law, that by this act are made equivalent to judgments, are described in the 18th section as rules of court, "whereby any sum of money, or any costs, charges, or expenses, shall be payable to any person;" such person to be deemed a judgment creditor within the meaning of the act, and to have the same remedies as are thereby given to judgment creditors. Rules of this kind are, consequently, like judgments, enforceable by execution under the 11th and 12th sections, against the property of the person by whom the money, &c., is payable; and are equitable charges upon his real property to the extent and in the manner provided by the 13th section, and may be made a charge upon his funded property under the 14th and 15th sections. And, like judgments, in order to affect real property against purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, these rules must be duly registered pursuant to the 19th section of this act, and the 4th section of the 2 Vict. c. 11.

We propose, on the present occasion, to review some of the most material questions that have arisen, and the principal points of practice, that, in the short time elapsed since the passing of the act, have been settled or agitated, relatively to these rules of court, thus made equivalent in effect to judgments.

I. RULES FOR THE PAYMENT OF A SUM OF MONEY.

In the first place, according to the construction that has been put upon these enactments, they have been held to apply only to cases where a precise sum of money is ordered by the court to be paid, and not to cases where something more is requisite, as where, before it becomes payable, an act is to be done by a third person. The money, in short, must be payable by the rule itself, and its amount must appear on the face of the rule.

This point was determined in the case of Jones v. Williams, (4 Per. & D. 217; 11 Adol. & Ell. 178), where the question was, whether a fieri facias could issue, under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, for non-payment of a sum of money found to be due by an award, the agreement of reference having been made a rule of court. It seems to have been argued, that, the parties having agreed to abide by the award, and the agreement having been made a rule of court, and the award made in pursuance of that agreement having directed the payment of a sum of money, the award was incorporated by relation in the rule of court, and, therefore, an execution might issue. But the Court of Queen's Bench held, that execution could not issue in this case. For, it was said, although money awarded to be paid under a submission that is made a rule of court may, undoubtedly, be considered as money payable by something arising out of and ingrafted on the rule, yet the difficulty that presents itself is, that there is no definite sum of money expressed to be payable by the rule itself. These rules are to have the effect of judgments, which are to charge the land; and, therefore, the sum to be charged ought to be distinctly stated in the document which thus charges the land, so that the purchasers or creditors may know what it is. They ought, also, to bind the land at the time they are entered; but, when rules like this are made, there is, at that time, nothing to inform anybody of the charge: the amount may not be ascertained for a year afterwards. And on these grounds, principally, the court was of opinion, that the power of issuing execution on a rule must be confined to cases where the money payable by the rule is expressed in the rule itself. Lord Denman, however, observed, in addition, that, "there is no difficulty in giving effect to the act of parliament as to awards, if a proper case is made out; and that is by calling on the delinquent party to shew cause why he should not pay a certain sum of money, pursuant to the award. If that rule is made absolute, an execution may issue for the sum distinctly specified in the rule so obtained."

In this very case, Jones v. Williams, when subsequently before the Court of Exchequer, (vide infra),

Mr. Baron Parke, and the other Judges of the Court of Exchequer, expressed their entire concurrence in the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Jones v. Williams.

It seems, therefore, to be settled, that, where a sum of money has been awarded to be paid under a submission which is made a rule of court, the money is not payable by that rule, so as to be enforced by execution under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, without a further and distinct order of the court for the payment of the sum.

It is, however, to be remarked, that the determination of the Court of Queen's Bench, in Jones v. Williams, has sometimes been represented, particularly in reporters' marginal notes, (those convenient but occasionally misleading brevities), as if it amounted to a decision, that execution could not be sued out under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, for money awarded by an arbitrator. But, it will be observed, that Lord Denman, after delivering the opinion of the court, that execution could not be had for the money by virtue of the original rule of submission, proceeded to point out the course that might be adopted, and which the court would sanction, for making the provisions of the statute available in this case, viz. by obtaining a rule to shew cause why the money should not be paid, pursuant to the award, which, when made absolute, would entitle the party to sue out execution thereon under the statute. And this view of the use that may be made of this enactment of the 1 & 2 Vict. has been followed and adopted with unqualified approbation by the Court of Exchequer, not only in the same case when afterwards before that court, but also in that of Richards v. Patterson, (8 Mee. & W. 313; 5 Jur. 894), and in the still more recent case of Doe d. Thompson v. Amey, (5 Jur. 808). In the last-mentioned case, the point was brought directly before the court; and it was contended, that the court had no power, either at common law or under the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, to make an order calling on a party to pay a specific sum awarded by an arbitrator; that, independently of the statute, their only power was to order the party to perform the award generally; and, in the event of his neglect or refusal, to punish him by attachment; and that the only object of the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, was to give to orders and rules of court a force and effect which they had not before, viz. that of judgments on which execution might issue; but did not confer on the courts the power of making any new species of order unknown to the then existing law. But the court was of opinion, that an order for an attachment against a party for not paying money presupposes a power in the court to order him to pay it; and made absolute a rule for the payment of a sum of money awarded under a submission that had been made a rule of court, thus giving an express and judicial assent to the propriety of the course suggested by Lord Denman, in Jones v. Williams.

II. RULES FOR THE PAYMENT OF COSTS.

But, although execution cannot issue under the act on a rule of court for the payment of money, unless the amount be determined and specified by the rule itself, yet, execution may issue on a rule ordering the payment of costs, though their amount is not specifically mentioned in the rule, being left to be ascertained by taxation by the officer of the court; and thus, where a submission is made a rule of court, an award for the payment of costs, to be ascertained by taxation, may, when their amount is so ascertained, be enforced by execution under the rule, without a further and distinct order of the court for the payment of the sum so ascertained.

In the case of Jones v. Williams, before the Court of Exchequer, (8 Mee. & W. 349; 5 Jur. 895), where the latter point was discussed, the principle laid down by the Court of Queen's Bench in the same case, to the effect, that the specific sum must appear on the face of the rule, was urged in argument, as applying also to a rule for the payment of costs. The observations of the judges of the Court of Exchequer, being principally directed to the distinction between the cases of a rule ordering payment of a sum of money and one ordering the payment of costs, are calculated to illustrate both, and apply almost equally to both, and will, therefore, be better understood, and tend more to the elucidation of the subject, if preserved in their original connection, than if we attempted to introduce them separately into the discussion of the several points.

In the case, then, of Jones v. Williams, before the Court of Exchequer, an action which had been commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant, was, by agreement in writing, referred to an arbitrator, who was to take an account between the parties, and all costs were to be paid by the parties against whom a balance of accounts should appear by the award to be due. The arbitrator having proceeded with the reference, awarded, that, upon the accounts referred to him, there was a balance of a specified amount due from the plaintiff to the defendant, which sum, together with the costs so made to abide the event of the award, the arbitrator directed to be paid by the plaintiff to the defendant on a certain day. The agreement was made a rule of court; and the costs were taxed by the Master at a certain sum. Mr. Baron Parke, after referring to the 18th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, and observing, that, according to the proper construction of the act, it does not apply to any costs, charges, or expenses, except those which are ordered by the court to be paid; and that it does not embrace cases in which something is necessary to be done, in order to give the party a title to the money, but includes those only in which the obligation to pay the money appears on the face of the rule, decree, or order, proceeded to say: "But, then, it is argued, that, when the court orders the payment of costs, something must be done in order to ascertain their amount before execution can issue. No doubt that is so; but then costs are not liable to the same observation as money, as they stand upon a peculiar footing. When the legislature mentions 'money, costs, charges and expenses,' it means money decreed or ordered to be paid, together with the costs, charges, and expenses, to be ascertained by the officer of the court. That point, indeed, it is unnecessary to decide; but, I am of opinion, that, with respect to costs, it is enough if they are ascertained by the officer of the court, and that it is not necessary that there should be any order to pay after they are taxed by the officer." Mr. Baron Alderson expressed himself to be of the same opinion. "With regard to the costs, charges and expenses," said the learned judge, "it seems to me, that they may be ascertained by the officer of the court, though not specifically mentioned in the rule of court. All that is required is, that the court shall order a sum of money to be paid; and, if it also order costs, that means the costs ascertained by the officer of the court. . . . But, in the case of an award, it would be monstrous to say, that any sum of money is payable under the order of the court. The order of the court there is, that the party do submit to the arbitration of A. B.; and unless you incorporate the award (which is an act long subsequent) with the rule of court, it would be making the court order the payment of a sum of money, the propriety of which depends on the judgment of a third party, and of which the court knows nothing. If such were the law, the court might commit the greatest injustice. Suppose a submission to arbitration and an award after Trinity Term; in the vacation, a writ of ca. sa. might issue; and is the party to remain in custody the whole of the vacation up to Michaelmas Term, before he can apply to set aside an award which may have been most improperly made against him? The sounder rule is this, that no execution should issue till the court has ascertained for itself the propriety of the award, and has made an order for the payment of the money awarded. And Mr. Baron Rolfe remarked, that, "According to all the writs settled by the Lord Chancellor, in pursuance of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, it is assumed, that the amount payable is previously ascertained by the decree or order of the court. That appears to me to make the distinction pointed out by my brothers Parke and Alderson, viz. that the statute having provided that a writ may be issued upon an order for the payment of money and costs, it may still issue for costs when taxed by the officer; but that such execution cannot possibly extend to the payment of any money which has not in terms been ascertained by the decree or order. The writs to which I have referred were framed upon great deliberation; and if there were any case in which the order for the performance of an award could be within the statute, it is most probable that a writ for that purpose would be found amongst the forms given by the Court of Chancery."

If, however, an arbitrator, when the costs are in his discretion, awards a gross sum for costs (which is not liable to taxation by the Master, Anon., 1 Chit. Rep. 38; Watson, Arbit. 138), it seems, that, consistently with the principle of the foregoing cases, it would be necessary to apply to the court for a rule for their payment, in order that execution may issue thereon.

III. RULE NISI IN THE FIRST INSTANCE.

We have seen, that, according to the mode of proceeding prescribed by the Court of Queen's Bench, and approved by the Court of Exchequer, the rule for the payment of a sum of money under an award, with a view to proceeding by execution, should be a rule to shew cause only in the first instance, upon which, when made absolute, execution shall issue; and an order ex parte, in such a case, is irregular. For, as remarked by Mr. Baron Parke, (8 Mee. & W. 316), if it were otherwise, in cases of awards execution might be issued without any opportunity whatever of a hearing being given to the party affected. This corresponds with the manner of obtaining a rule for an attachment to enforce an award. And not only in this, but in other respects, the rule of court, under the statute for the payment of a sum awarded, is considered as analogous to an attachment under the old law; and this analogy appears likely to be observed in the practice relative to the proceedings for obtaining the rule under the statute. (See Mendell v. Tyrrell, 6 Jur. Rep. 18).

Thus, in Richards v. Patterson, (8 Mee. & W. 316; 5 Jur. 894), the plaintiff having obtained an order for the taxation of his attorney's bill of costs, it was taxed accordingly; but the allocatur was not served on the plaintiff in the regular way, but was sent him by the post, and no demand was made on him for the amount. The attorney afterwards obtained, on an ex parte application, an order upon the plaintiff to pay the amount found by the Master to be due; and without serving it upon the plaintiff, or giving him any notice of it, made the order a rule of court, and issued a fi. fa. thereon under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18. But these proceedings were set aside as irregular, the court being of opinion, that, before process is awarded against the property of a party under these provisions, the same steps should be taken as would have been necessary in a proceeding against his person by attachment; or, at all events, he should have some distinct notice of the proceedings. And, before this statute, no attachment could be granted, in such a case as this, without a previous personal service of the allocatur.

The rule should be served personally; but, it was said by Mr. Justice Patteson, the other day, in the Bail Court, (Jordan v. Berwick, 6 Jur. Rep. 163); that where personal service may not be practicable, the court will, on a statement of the particular circumstances, consider whether the stricter service may not be relaxed.

IV. JUDGE'S ORDER.

A judge's order for the payment of money or costs, may be enforced by execution or the other remedies given by this statute, by first making it a rule of court. (Wallis v. Sheffield, 3 Jur. 1002; see Archbold's Practice, 7th edit., by Chitty, 1204).

V. DECREES AND ORDERS IN EQUITY.

Before the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 came into operation, a decree of a court of equity, unless it were for the land itself, operated only in personam, and could only be enforced by what is termed process of contempt, against the party disobeying it, under which the party might be arrested, and a sequestration might be issued. This, however, being only a personal proceeding, abates by the death of the party; and though it may be revived against his personal representative, yet, unless the decree is for the performance of a covenant in which the heir is bound, or for the land itself, it cannot be revived against his heir; and, except in such cases, therefore, cannot give to a decree in equity the same effect as a judgment at law, in binding the real estate. But this defect in the proceeding by sequestration has, to a certain extent, been remedied by the 18th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which communicates the effect of a judgment in the superior courts of common law, not only, as we have seen, to rules of those courts, but to "all decrees and orders of courts of equity, and all orders of the Lord Chancellor or of the Court of Review in matters of bankruptcy, and all orders of the Lord Chancellor in matters of lunacy, whereby any sum of money, or any costs, charges, or expenses shall be payable to any person." Such decrees and orders, therefore, are armed with the like remedies, and have the like binding force upon the property of the person by whom the money, &c., is payable, as judgments; and must be registered like them, in order to be effectual.

The 20th section empowers the judges of the courts of law, equity, and bankruptcy, to issue new forms of writs for giving effect to the provisions of the act. And in pursuance of this provision, forms of writs of fieri facias, elegit, and venditioni exponas, similar to those adopted in the courts of common law, were promulgated by the Lord Chancellor, by the Orders of the 10th May, 1839, (1 Beav. App. xii.; 3 Jur. 410), for the purpose of giving the means of enforcing, by common law process, decrees of the courts of equity for the payment of money and costs. The forms are accompanied by certain regulations respecting them, the principal of which provide: That every person, to whom, in any cause or matter pending in the Court of Chancery, any sum of money, or any costs, have been ordered to be paid, shall, after the lapse of one month from the time when such order for payment was duly passed and entered, be entitled by his clerk in court to sue out one or more writ or writs of fieri facias, or elegit, of the forms provided, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the cases may require. That such writs, when sealed, shall be delivered to the sheriff, or other officer, to whom the execution of the like writs issuing out of the superior courts of common law belongs, and shall be executed by such sheriff, or other officer, as nearly as may be, in the same manner in which he does or ought to execute such like writs; and such writs, when returned by such sheriff or other officer, shall be delivered to the clerks in court, by whom respectively they were sued out, or be left at their respective seats, and shall thereupon be filed as of record in the office of the six clerks; and that, if it shall appear, upon the return of any such writ of fieri facias, that the sheriff or other officer has, by virtue of such writ, seized, but not sold, any goods of the person ordered to pay such sum of money or costs, the person to whom such sum of money or costs is payable shall, immediately after such writ, with such return, shall be filed as of record, be at liberty, by his clerk in court, to sue out a writ of venditioni exponas, in the form provided, or as near thereto as circumstances may require.

The mode of proceeding thus instituted, enables a person who has succeeded in establishing, in the Court of Chancery, his right to a pecuniary demand, to sue out execution for its amount, in the same manner as he may upon a judgment in a court of common law.

But here, we may observe with Mr. Daniell, (2 Chancery Practice, 701), that the above orders and writs do not supersede the ordinary remedies of the court for enforcing its decrees and orders; and that, in fact, they are applicable only to cases in which money or costs are decreed or ordered to be paid by one party to another, and are totally inapplicable to cases where any other act is ordered to be done by a party. Orders or decrees of this latter description, therefore, must still be enforced by the ordinary process of contempt.

In Gibbs v. Pike, (8 Mee. & W. 223; and see Wells v. Gibbs, 4 Jur. 1178), the Court of Exchequer was of opinion, that an order of a court of equity for the payment of money into the Bank, in the name of the Accountant-General, to the credit of a cause depending in that court, is not an order to which the effect of a judgment is given by sect. 18 of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. The case being decided on another ground, it was not necessary to determine that point. But it seems to be clear, that such an order is not within the meaning of the 18th section of the act.

A Practical Treatise of the Law of Evidence, and Digest of Proofs in Civil and Criminal Proceedings. Third Edition, with considerable Alterations and Additions. By THOMAS STARKIE, Esq., of the Inner Temple, one of her Majesty's Counsel. 3 Vols. 8vo. London, 1842. [Stevens & Norton.]

No branch of positive law is so generally interesting in theory, or so exciting in practice, as that of evidence. It is almost the only one which can be rendered attractive to an unprofessional reader. Its object being the discovery of truth, it takes rank as a branch of experimental philosophy; and, as it is perpetually tested in practice by the common sense and knowledge of mankind, and is concerned with the establishment of particular facts, and not of general truths for general use, it has escaped much of that perversion from technical reasoning and sinister influences by which other departments of the law have suffered. To borrow the words of Mr. Starkie, "however widely different codes may vary from each other in matters of arbitrary or positive institution, and of mere artificial creation, the general means of investigating the truth of contested facts must be common to all. Every rational system which provides the means of proof must be founded on experience and reason, on a well-grounded knowledge of human nature and conduct, on a consideration of the value of testimony, and on the weight due to coincident circumstances. Here, therefore, the object of the law is identified with that of pure science; the common aim of each is the discovery of truth; and all the means within the reach of philosophy, all the connexions and links, physical and moral, which experience and reason can discover, are thus rendered subservient to the purposes of justice."

The subject, thus attractive in itself, has been most fortunate in its expositors. There are now, honourable rivals for public favour, two general treatises on this extensive and intricate branch of law, of which it is not too much to say, that they excel all the text-books of the day in the combination of learning and research with clear method and scientific precision; while the important department which comprises the rules of evidence applicable to proceedings in equity has been treated with considerable ability by Mr. Gresley; and upon one isolated topic, that of the application of extrinsic evidence to the interpretation of wills, Sir J. Wigram has favoured the profession with a dissertation, which possesses all the merits, and is free from some of the defects, that characterise the celebrated essay of Fearn. Of the two general treatises, Mr. Starkie's is undoubtedly more philosophical in its reasoning, and more scientific and methodical in the details of its arrangement than its rival; in other respects it would be difficult to decide between the claims of the two works, so far as they concur in design. Mr. Phillipps's work, however, (that is to say the last edition, which was published in 1838), labours under this disadvantage, that it is confined to an examination of the general principles of evidence, and does not treat of the rules applicable to particular subjects and actions, otherwise than as they illustrate those general principles. Mr. Starkie, on the other hand, reserving the first part of his work chiefly for the discussion of general principles, devotes two closely printed volumes to a digest, alphabetically arranged, of the rules of evidence and the proofs applicable to particular subjects and actions. It is in this that the great practical superiority and utility of Mr. Starkie's book consists; without which, we fear, its merely literary and scientific merits would scarcely have gained for it the popularity which it enjoys. Under the alphabetical arrangement of this second part we find, besides the particular heads of Assumpsit, Bankruptcy, Bills of Exchange, &c., many titles of a general application, but which conveniently admit of being discussed by themselves. Such are the titles Admissions, Collateral Facts, Confidential Communications, Custom, Death-bed Declarations, Estoppel, Statute of Frauds, Inspection, Limitations, Parol Evidence, Prescription, Presumptions, Stamp, &c.

The new edition has been long expected and long delayed; but the care which appears to have been bestowed on it, and the great additions it has received, are some excuse for the lateness of its appearance. Among the subjects of importance which appear to have received particular attention, we may mention—Assumpsit, Bankruptcy, Bills of Exchange, Distress, Ejectment, Parol Evidence, Partners, Insurance (under the title Policy), Sheriff, Trespass, Trover, Vendor and Vendee, Will. Under the last title, Mr. Starkie has treated many of the cases relating to the parol explanation of written instruments, which, we think, might have found a better place in the general discussion of the rules as to parol evidence; but we are aware that it is a common (though we think unfounded) opinion, that the rules of evidence in aid of the interpretation of wills are different from those which apply to instruments inter vivos.

Our remaining space might have been advantageously devoted to a notice of some of the interesting points which have arisen upon the recent statutes and decisions, but the conduct of our contemporary, The Law Magazine, has furnished us with matter of a less attractive kind. The Law Magazine was formerly a well-conducted and agreeably written periodical, free from offence, and, in spite of some wild and flashy speculations by which tyros were occasionally dazzled and older lawyers astonished, was not altogether useless in the business of the profession; although its chief attraction lay in the very spirited legal biographies, from a pen which seems to be now laid aside, or devoted to other objects. Of its present merits or fortunes, we hear little; but we are sorry, for old acquaintance' sake, to see it disgraced by being made a vehicle for such shabby and dishonest attacks as that upon Mr. Starkie, which appeared in its last number. A critic may sometimes be led almost unconsciously into injustice by personal antipathy; but Mr. Starkie's amiable and unpretending character would be the last to occasion any delusion of that kind, and the article in question bears such internal evidence of conscious falsehood, that its writer cannot be allowed even the poor excuse of personal pique. It is obviously an interested and mercenary misrepresentation,—intended, not to protect the public, but to damage a successful, and therefore obnoxious rival*. As such, we should not have been disposed to notice it; but the publishers of Mr. Starkie's book, naturally feeling indignant at this attack upon their property, and upon an author for whom they feel great respect, have requested us to look into the matter, and, if we should detect the knavery, to expose it. We see no reason for refusing to do them that justice, or for attempting to conceal that we do it at their request. Mr. Starkie's complaint has already appeared, (ante, p. 35).

It would be an excellent arrangement, both for publishers and readers, if authors could be persuaded to complete the whole of their manuscript before sending any portion of it to the printer. The plan would then be perfectly digested, the references accurately made, and, by reason of its rapid progress through the press, the work would comprise the latest information, without the incumbrance of an appendix. But, alas! authors are not so tractable; they can no more keep their "copy" by them, than boys can keep halfpence; and never rightly know what they have done, until they see it in print. Whatever may be the cause, books seldom pass through the press with one fifth of the speed which the mere processes of composing and correcting the proofs would allow of; and publishers generally find the delay to be greater, in proportion to the ability and learning of their authors. The more they love their labour, the more they dwell upon it. Mr. Starkie's work appears to have been nearly three years in the press. The necessity of printing a copious appendix, like that which was published with the former edition, arranged in the order of the text, and containing the latest cases, seems to have been foreseen; and Mr. Starkie, having that remedy in reserve, was even less anxious to expedite his work, than he might otherwise have been. The policy or convenience of publishing the book before the Appendix and the Index could be prepared, we think very questionable; but as no one is obliged to purchase it in its incomplete state, it is not easy to see what quarrel can be picked, either with author or publisher, on that score. What advantage a dishonest critic can take of such an irregularity, we have, unfortunately, an opportunity of perceiving.

The general charge brought against Mr. Starkie by the Law Magazine, besides "numberless minor repetitions, errors, and omissions," is, "the total omission, or, at best, most careless insertion of large and important subjects connected with the law of evidence." There is a great difference between a charge of "total omission" and one of "careless insertion." The former might be capable of demonstrative refutation—the latter, being matter of degree and of opinion, could not be so easily disproved, and serves to fall back upon when the graver charge is questioned. It is as if one should say to the reviewer: "You are a conscious liar and calumniator, or, at best, an ignorant fellow." If Mr. Starkie had been guilty of "totally omitting" one single large and important subject, would not the reviewer have been too happy at the opportunity of saying so unequivocally, without this miserable prevarication? At the outset, he confesses himself too great a coward for his task. The same sweeping charge is insinuated at the conclusion of the article, in these words: "We would suggest, that a corrigenda should be added, and that the author should have time to make ample corrections and additions. Let the most inaccurate pages be boldly cancelled, and their contents carefully remodelled." Here is promise of enough tainted matter to feast the most hungry critic. But before we examine the particular morsels that have been selected, it may be worth while to cite another general charge, which betrays the animus of the article: we mean, that of "the inferiority of the paper, and the badness and variety (see pp. 722, 723, 2nd vol.) of the type." The book, to be sure, is not got up in the style of an annual, but the paper is fully equal to the average of law books, and certainly better (to use an unexceptionable standard) than that of the Law Magazine; while the typography is, as Messrs. Hanks' work always is, excellent; the type evidently new, and well worked. The single instance of "variety," referred to by the reviewer, illustrates, we hope, nothing worse than his ignorance. There is no variety of type; but pp. 722 and 723 appear, by the binder's mark at the foot, to be a cancel, from which, in order to make room for the added matter, the leads between the lines have been removed, just as is occasionally done with the leading articles of THE JURIST, and other periodicals.

That branch of Mr. Starkie's work which relates to the competency of witnesses is first fastened on. The text (Vol. 1, p. 119) stands thus:—"4thly, a witness is incompetent where the record would, if his party succeeded, be evidence of some matter of fact to entitle him to a legal advantage, or repel a legal liability." The course Mr. Starkie had laid down and was pursuing in introducing this proposition, was, first, to consider the question of incompetency, independently of the enactment of the recent statute, (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, ss. 28 and 27); and then to shew in what cases the statute restores competency; and it is while he is treating the subject independently of the statute, that he lays down this fourth proposition. The reviewer, however, deems the consideration of this fourth class of cases to be unnecessary; because "it is quite clear that the statute embraces all cases under this head;" in other words, that a witness is made competent by the statute, whenever the record would, if his party succeeded, be evidence of some fact to entitle him to a legal advantage, or to repel a legal liability. This position is erroneous. There are many cases in which competency would not be given by the statute to a witness within the fourth class. An instance is given by Mr. Starkie, in the case of Stuart v. Barnes, (1 Stark. Ev. 125; 1 M. & R. 472), where a witness, who was called upon the trial of an issue from a court of equity to support a modus, and though not a party, yet being interested in the decree as evidence of the right, was rejected, on the ground that the decree founded on the record would be evidence for him, notwithstanding any indorsement on the record. From the second objection taken in the same case, and acceded to by Mr. Baron Alderson, it appears also, that there is very great doubt, whether a witness within Mr. Starkie's fourth class is competent, where the record, although it would not itself be evidence for or against him, establishes, or tends to establish, a practice beneficial or hurtful to him, as evidence. Witnesses within the fourth class are also, according to the later authorities, (overruling Wheat v. Graham, 7 Sim. 61), incompetent in courts of equity, notwithstanding the statute. (See Davies v. Morgan, 1 Bear. 406; Holden v. Hearn, Id. 445). But, whether this were so or not, Mr. Starkie's mode of treating the subject is equally unimpeachable and free from ambiguity.

The Law Magazine proceeds:—"Two Nisi Prius decisions are then cited, (Vol. 1, p. 198), which were overruled in Yeomans v. Legh, (2 Mee. & W. 419); but the recent cases of Bowman v. Willis, (3 Bing. N. C. 660); Knight v. Moore, (7 C. & P. 258); Groom v. Bradley, (8 C. & P. 500); Jackson v. Gallowsay, (Id. 480); Stears v. Carnoordine, (Id. 570); Robinson v. Farreday, (Id. 752); and Wedgewood v. Hartley, (10 Adol. & Ell. 619), which all, more or less, illustrate the practical working of the statute, are wholly omitted. We may here observe, that a few pages might with profit have been bestowed in pointing out instances where witnesses, though no longer competent on the ground of the admissibility of the verdict, might still be held so, as interested in the event of the suit."

Every reader of the first sentence of the above extract must infer, that Mr. Starkie has cited the overruled Nisi Prius cases, and has omitted Yeomans v. Legh. The reviewer does not dare to say so, though he is not ashamed to insinuate it, with the book open before him, at the very page where they are cited as overruled by that case; but, lest this ingenious fraud should be too easily detected, the reader is referred to p. 198 of Mr. Starkie's work, nearly 100 pages beyond the passage actually intended. Two of the five cases charged to have been omitted, are to be found in the work; and we may here observe, that nine other cases, the omission of which is charged in another part of the review, are all to be found in Mr. Starkie's book, in the proper places, namely, Duckworth v. Harrison, Boys v. Ancell, Sainsbury v. Matthews, Lawson v. Langley, Wagstaffe v. Sharpe, Willis v. Langridge, Abercrombie v. Hickman, Nowell v. Davies, and Baynton v. Cattle. But, as to these charges of omissions, it is obvious enough, that a writer cannot be expected to cite every case that the reporters have chosen to record, even upon those subjects which fall directly and distinctly within the scope of the work, much less upon those collateral subjects which he does not profess to treat fully. A legal position is not rendered more correct or more useful by citing twenty cases than by citing one. If any one would see how disagreeable and inconvenient a text book may be made by such superabundant citation, let him turn to Mr. Ram's learned Treatise on Assets, a work of great merit, but much disfigured by this fault. It is the part of a text-writer to select leading cases from the mass of self-evident and identical decisions with which the recent abuses of reporters have burthened the profession. The accumulation is already so enormous, that no treatise, unless its bulk were as unlimited as that of Viner's Abridgment, could contain them all. We have no doubt that all the cases of any importance, which were not published when Mr. Starkie's book was going through the press, or which escaped his notice, will be included in the Appendix, which, as there must be such an impediment, may as well be large as small. The reviewer could not, in the face of the notice in the first volume, and of the Appendix of 226 pages to the former edition, be ignorant that this was intended. To return to the subject of competency: the few pages which the reviewer desiderates to point out when witnesses may still be held incompetent, as interested in the event of the suit, are those very pages which he has already misrepresented. The author having first explained and classified the cases where witnesses were incompetent before the statute, and then stated the cases in which the statute removes the incompetency, has necessarily shewn in what cases it remains.

The next, and the only charge of all which would be of any consequence, even if all were true, is, that the New Rules of Pleading, limiting the effect of the general issue, and circumscribing the species of evidence that may be proved under it, are passed over almost without comment. Will any one believe that Mr. Starkie has been guilty of such gross neglect? The passage, italics and notes of admiration included, runs thus: "Great was our surprise and disappointment, when, on looking to the head 'Rules of Court,' vol. 3, p. 979, we found the New Rules of Pleading copied out verbatim, and just three cases, from the 9th vol. of Messrs. Carrington & Payne's Reports, explanatory of their operation!" The reviewer has here contrived to be guilty of something still more mean and disgraceful than a direct falsehood, and yet the letter of the truth is not infringed. The title "Rules of Court" contains no more than the reviewer describes it to contain, and it would have been a gross violation of method, as he well knows, if it had contained more. Mr. Starkie has, of course, discussed the rules in detail, with reference to numerous authorities, under the several heads of Assumpsit, Case, Covenant, Debt, Detinue, Negligence, &c.; and it is impossible to look at those heads, without seeing that he has done so. The head, "Rules of Court," was obviously only created in order to collect the rules together for the purposes of reference.

The reviewer then takes up the subject of Variances, and, alluding to the enactment of the 23rd section of the stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, relating to amendment of immaterial variances, says, that Mr. Starkie "contents himself with referring, in something less than two pages of notes, to a few cases on the statute, the latest of which was decided more than five years back. All of these too, almost without exception, are to be found, and in the same order as they are taken by Mr. Starkie, in the last edition of Mr. Phillipp's Treatise, published in 1838." An impudent insinuation that Mr. Starkie has pilfered the matter for his new edition from Mr. Phillipp's work. The "few" cases cited in the note referred to, and the order in which they are cited are as follows: "Hanbury v. Ella, Parry v. Fairhurst, Doe v. Errington, Pullen v. Seymour, John v. Currie, Watkins v. Morgan, Cooper v. Whitechurch, Adams v. Power, Hemming v. Parry, Mash v. Denham, Ivey v. Young, Parry v. Fairhurst, Doe v. Edwards, Howell v. Thomas, Hill v. Street, Frankum v. Earl of Falmouth, Guest v. Elwes, Jenkins v. Treloar, Lejeune v. Dennett, and Sheers v. Philp." The cases cited in Mr. Phillipp's work, are the following, and in the following order:—Jenkins v. Treloar, Hanbury v. Ella, Parry v. Fairhurst, Doe v. Edwards, Hemming v. Parry, Mash v. Denham, Howell v. Thomas, Ivey v. Young, Doe v. Errington, John v. Currie, Adams v. Power, Cooper v. Whitehouse, Watkins v. Morgan, Hill v. Street, Frankum v. Earl of Falmouth, and Guest v. Elwes. Certainly a most remarkable identity of citation and arrangement!

Mr. Starkie is next arraigned for not having stated all the decisions upon the recent Statute of Limitations which are to be found in the Indexes. Considering that the majority of them have not the slightest connexion with the subject of evidence, we should have been rather surprised to have met with them in Mr. Starkie's book. In the same spirit it is elsewhere lamented, that the whole of Burn's Justice is not to be found under such titles as Bastardy, Affiliation, &c.

In treating of Prescription, Mr. Starkie has committed three capital felonies, of none of which shall we attempt to acquit him, but rather shall confess ourselves accomplices after the fact in the second of them. First, he has treasonably allowed the words "less objectionable" to be printed instead of "unobjectionable;" secondly, he atheistically opines, that the recent statute has not superseded the occasional necessity or convenience of pleading a non-existing grant or a prescriptive right; and thirdly, he has, of malice aforethought, cited Mr. Baron Parke's admirable and valuable judgment in Bright v. Walker, well knowing that the learned judge has therein alluded with approbation to what Mr. Starkie said in a former edition of his treatise. Fie, Mr. Starkie!

In the next place, and to conclude, for we are weary of this stuff, Mr. Starkie has not brought in the criminal statutes of July, 1837. Again we say, we should have been surprised to meet with them in a digest of proofs. They have varied the punishment of several offences, but the proofs requisite for convicting parties charged with them remain as before. However, in connexion with these statutes, it appears that Mr. Starkie has committed an oversight in not altering his definition of burglary—the time within which that offence may be committed being no longer regulated by the amount of daylight, but being an invariable period of nine hours, viz. from nine in the evening to six in the morning.

These are all of the "graver charges," from which the character of the second division of the critique, which is devoted to "minor" errors and faults of style, may be divined. We may spare our readers any further comment—the imputations upon Mr. Starkie's character have been sufficiently refuted; as to that of the critic, we fear, if we do not mistake the pen, that it is past the reach of advice or censure—Cantabit vacuus coram latrone viator. S.

Imperial Parliament.

Monday, Feb. 23.

Lord Brougham laid on the table a Bill for the Establishment of Local Courts, which he stated to be similar to the one introduced by him eight or nine years ago. His Lordship was aware, that the late Lord Chancellor had expressed an intention of bringing in a Bill for the Establishment of County Courts; but that Bill would fall short of what he (Lord Brougham) proposed to effect. For example, his noble and learned friend proposed to extend the jurisdiction of County Courts, in matters of debt, from cases of 40s. to 20l.; and they were also to be made available for purposes of bankruptcy and insolvency cases. His (Lord Brougham's) bill would also give to the Local County Courts jurisdiction in all matters of debt of 20l.; but he would go beyond that, and give them power to try all actions of tort, or assault and battery, of libel, and of seduction; of fraudulent bankruptcy cases; and, in fact, of all personal actions, provided the damages sought to be recovered did not exceed 50l. There was another, and most important part of the measure, which he would retain, namely, that the Judges of the County Courts should have a voluntary jurisdiction in actions to any amount, where consent of both parties was given in writing. Those parties who consented might have justice administered in actions to any amount at, he might say, their own door. There was a part of the former bill which he would also propose to retain. He meant the clause of reconciliation, which had been productive of so much advantage in preventing litigation wherever it had been tried. He might mention, that, in one country, not that in which it had been first applied, but one in which it had worked exceedingly well, the kingdom of Denmark, its effects had been so salutary, that, out of 31,000 causes entered for hearing, 21,000 had been settled by this clause of reconciliation, thus saving the parties a great deal of tedious litigation, and a vast amount of expense. This clause he would retain in his present bill; and, in fact, he did not propose to make any material alteration, save in the 19th section, which related to Courts of Request. His Lordship added, that the bill had the approbation of the Commissioners of Legal Inquiry.

The Lord Chancellor said, that it was his intention to lay on the table, in a few days, a Bill having the same object as that of his noble and learned friend. There would be, then, three Bills on the same subject before the House, including that of Lord Cottenham.

Lord Campbell hoped, that, before the present session closed, some measure would be passed for establishing improved Local Courts. This was the only country in Europe that was without such Courts. It was true there were County Courts, but they had fallen into desuetude.

Tuesday, March 1.

Lord Campbell said he had prepared three Bills for the consideration of their Lordships, and he would then state briefly their nature and object; reserving to himself to enter more into detail respecting them, at a future period. His objects were: firstly, to improve the administration of justice in that House as a Court of Appeal, in the last resort; secondly, to alter the present system of appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and, thirdly, to reform the administration of justice in the Court of Chancery.

His Lordship's objections to the present system in these respects were, that there were two Courts of Appeal of co-ordinate jurisdiction. By the present constitution of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, appeals from the Admiralty Courts, some of the Ecclesiastical Courts, and the Courts in the colonies, went to that tribunal; while appeals from the Court of Chancery and the Courts of Law went to the House of Lords. In certain cases a suitor might take his appeal either to the House of Lords, or to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and it might sometimes happen, that a question of law, arising in one Court of Appeal, might be sent for trial to a Court below, and have an appeal from that decision to the other Court of Appeal. Another advantage in having a single Court of Appeal would be, the securing an able and efficient bar, and, as a result, a diminution of costs to suitors. On balancing the various considerations, he was of opinion, that the Court of Appeal should be the House of Lords; which had the advantage of being able to command the attendance of the judges, which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had not. He proposed, therefore, to transfer to the House of Lords all appeals from the Consistory Court, the Court of Admiralty, and the Colonial Courts, and also all appeals in Lancry. To meet this increase of judicial business, his Lordship proposed that the Crown should have the power of summoning the House of Lords to sit in the recess of Parliament for judicial business only. He proposed that the Lord Chancellor should preside in that House, as the supreme judge of appeal. But then it would be requisite to meet this new arrangement by an improvement in the Court of Chancery. He proposed, therefore, to have a permanent Chief Judge in Equity. The presiding Judge in Equity should be selected from some of those judges already sitting as Vice-Chancellors; and to him an appeal should lie, as before, to the Lord Chancellor; and from his decision an appeal would go to the House of Lords. This, he thought, would be a great improvement, as an appeal from the Lord Chancellor at Lincoln's Inn to the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords was a mockery. His Lordship, after discussing the objections to his plan, then briefly re-stated, that his first bill would be for removing to the House of Lords the appeals now sent to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; his second, to enable her Majesty to summon the House of Lords to transact judicial business during a prorogation; and the third, to appoint a permanent presiding judge in the Court of Chancery; and he thought it important that he should be one of the four now sitting in the Equity Courts.

The Lord Chancellor observed, that, as his noble and learned friend had not been kind enough to communicate the contents of his Bills to him, he was unable to follow his noble and learned friend into any details, and must confine himself to some general observations. With regard to the Court of Chancery, his Lordship said, that the bill of his noble and learned friend, (Lord Cottenham), which had lately come into operation, had been attended by those results which he had felt confident would flow from it. In November last, when the bill came into operation, there were upwards of 500 causes waiting for hearing, and that state of things had continued for a considerable period. Since November 230 new causes had been set down, making, in all, 730 causes in arrear for trial. Now, including the new causes as well as the old ones, there were only 126 causes in arrear. The increase of business, as had been anticipated, was very considerable; it was no less than thirty per cent., exclusive of those causes that were not yet ripe for hearing. The main question, however, was the appeals. At the present moment, there were not more than twenty-four appeals; and he was satisfied, that when the business fell regularly into its ordinary channels, there would not be more than fifteen or twenty appeals each year. As to the objection, that an appeal from the Chancellor to the Chancellor was unwise, that objection, he apprehended, was founded on inattention to the weight and importance of the judicial character; he (the Lord Chancellor) would undertake to say, that, when a cause came before a judge, either on rehearing or appeal, he would look with even more caution to the considerations which had influenced his previous judgment, than if it had been the judgment of another. But, besides this, the Lord Chancellor did not sit on appeals alone; he had the aid of other noble and learned Lords, and the decisions come to were not the decisions of the Lord Chancellor, but had the benefit of the most careful consideration by the other noble and learned Lords. With regard to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, they were called upon to abolish it, though it was only a few years since they had thought fit to extend and consolidate it. The constitution of that tribunal was admirably fitted to deal with the questions brought before it—questions embracing a vast variety of Foreign Law, European and Oriental; there were the judges of England to advise on English Law; the Equity judges for questions of Equity; there were the judges of the Ecclesiastical Courts to decide on matters arising out of the Ecclesiastical Law; and judges of the Colonial Courts who were able to give advice on Oriental Law. There was not the alleged difficulty of bringing this tribunal together. But the strongest argument against the alterations proposed by his noble and learned friend was, that the Judicial Committee, as at present constituted, had given unmixed satisfaction. There was now scarcely any arrear. There were only seven or eight appeals standing for hearing; and there would not have been even that arrear, but for certain Indian appeals which had stood over, because no one appeared to prosecute them. With regard to the appellate jurisdiction of that House, there never was a period when there was less necessity for interfering with it, as there were no less than four learned Lords who had filled the highest judicial station, who every day devoted their attention to appeals; and he hoped that the House would not now either surrender their jurisdiction, or suffer those alterations in it, which would ultimately draw danger upon it, or expose it to loss that respect and reverence which some persons were desirous of undermining.

Lord Cottenham approved the principle of his noble and learned friend's measure, so far as regarded the necessity of a permanent head in the Court of Chancery and in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, an object which he (Lord Cottenham) had always had in view. But his Lordship thought it an unfortunate time to make such a proposition, when an Act had recently passed for making an alteration in the establishment of the Court of Chancery, in order to dispose of the arrears; and that experiment had not yet been fully tried. He thought, that, whilst the experiment was going on, it would not be wise to interfere with it, and to undo in February what had been done in September.

Lord Brougham thought, that many of the objections of his noble and learned friend (Lord Campbell) were unavoidable, and founded on the necessary state of things in an appellate jurisdiction, and the difficulty of obtaining a sufficient number of Judges well qualified to deal with the questions. He thought it a good ground of objection to such a Court as that proposed by his noble and learned friend, that the Judges would sit as Judges of appeal only. A due admixture of Judges, not confined to the exercise of appellate functions, but who were, on the contrary, acquainted with the practical business of the subordinate Courts, was desirable. As to the want of an efficient head to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that, it was true, was an evil to some extent, but it was more apparent than real, and did not lead to so many practical inconveniences as might be supposed. Each of the Judges of the Court took a cause in succession, a practice which was found to be attended with beneficial results. Then, as to the want of an efficient bar, that was an evil which no change in the appellate jurisdiction could remove; for, to the extent to which it existed, his Lordship shewed, that it depended on the great variety of cases brought before the Court on appeal. The same bar would not attend on appeals from Scotland that would attend on appeals from the Court of Chancery, or from the Ecclesiastical or Foreign Courts. He should wish to see the measures on the table before he made up his mind; but, as at present advised, he thought that some of the evils, which his noble and learned friend had adverted to, existed rather in theory than in practice; and others, he believed, were quite inevitable.

Lord Campbell shortly replied; and the Bills were laid on the table.

Monday, Feb. 28.

DISSENTERS' MARRIAGES' (ENGLAND) BILL.—On the order of the day for the commitment of this Bill being read, the House went into Committee. After a short discussion of some of the clauses, the Bill was agreed to. The House resumed, and the report was ordered to be brought up on Tuesday (1st March).

Thursday, March 3.

Lord Mahon moved for and obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Law relating to Copyright. The present measure would, in many respects, be the same as the Bill brought in in the last Session of Parliament. It would differ, however, in this: that it proposed to make the term twenty-five years after the death of the author, instead of sixty; and he proposed to give the Privy Council a power of interference to prevent the suppression of a useful work by the friends of a deceased author.

LONDON, MARCH 12, 1842.

It will be perceived from our Parliamentary Summary, that two very important Bills are now before the House of Lords; one for improving the mode of conducting the proceedings in matters of Lunacy; and the other for effecting some very material changes in the Law of Evidence.

With regard to the first, it is pretty well known, that the existing practice in lunacy is such, as to make the protection of the Court of Chancery wholly inaccessible, where there is any opposition to the commission, except to persons almost in affluent circumstances. That a lunatic possesses a moderate fortune, is not sufficient to justify his friends in seeking for him the guardianship of the Court of Chancery; he must possess something exceeding a mere competence. An estate, for instance, not exceeding 300*l.* in annual value, would be, in all probability, so deeply invaded by the expenses attendant on a commission of lunacy at all opposed, and the subsequent safe but costly administration of Chancery, as barely to leave an adequate maintenance for the lunatic. First, there is the application to the Court for a commission; there is then the inquiry before the Commissioners, the duration of which it is scarcely possible to foresee, and the expense of which depends upon its duration, as both the Commissioners and the Juries are paid by fees, according to the number of days occupied. When the inquiry is concluded, and the return made, and the lunatic fairly brought within the protection of Chancery, there is then a continual and not inconsiderable source of expense in the necessity of a petition to the Court, and a reference to the Master, upon every the most trifling transaction, which it may be requisite for the Committee to enter into in respect to the management of the lunatic's estate. We believe, indeed we may safely assert, that, where the absolute protection of the lunatic's estate does not render it necessary, an application for the protection of Chancery could never be prudently advised, unless in the plainest possible case, if the lunatic's property is much under 10,000*l.*; and we know, that it is every day's practice, for the friends of persons of small property, and unsound mind, to manage them and their property in the best way that they can, subject to all the inconveniences arising from the virtual incapacity of the lunatic, rather than to apply to a jurisdiction which would protect the estate at the price of its total absorption.

There can be no question, that, where a person is, by mental disease, rendered incapable of managing his property, it must be desirable, that the Law should provide for its safe management, instead of leaving it to the voluntary assistance of friends and relations, with all the difficulties attendant upon the legal ownership and apparent authority remaining vested in a person incapable of rational volition. It is equally unquestionable, that the protection of the Law, to be worth having, must be accessible at such a price as will not reduce the fortune of the applicant below the point of an adequate subsistence, having regard to his habits and station in life. Any measure, therefore, tending to diminish, in any degree, the expense of obtaining for lunatics the protection of Chancery, must be looked at, we apprehend, as desirable; provided only it be not inconsistent with the due and sufficient exercise of the jurisdiction.

The Lord Chancellor's plan is obviously based on the principle of charging upon the State a portion of the expense of protecting lunatics. Whether this principle be, in the abstract, just or unjust it is now unnecessary to inquire, as by far the greater part of the expense of administering justice stands, and has always stood, on precisely the same footing. And, if it be proper that the expense of judicial inquiry into any matter of litigation, as, for instance, whether a testator was or was not insane at the time he made his will, should be borne by the State, there seems no reason why it should not be equally proper, that the State should bear the expense of an inquiry, whether or not a living person is or is not insane, and is or is not to be committed to the care of the law. Whether two permanent commissioners will be incapable, as suggested by Lord Cottenham, of performing the duties required of them, is matter of detail. The other objection, however, taken by the same learned Lord, that it will not be prudent to give up the control of the Masters in the management of lunatics' estates, is matter of substance as well as of detail; because it is precisely the control of the Masters that forms one of the elements of the present oppressive costliness of a Chancery administration of a lunatic's estate. For ourselves, we can see no peculiar sanctity in a Master's office, and no peculiar virtue in the mode of inquiry therein practised. The great desideratum for the protection of the lunatic is the superintending control of the Lord Chancellor; and, provided that remains, as Lord Lyndhurst's bill contemplates, we cannot see why Commissioners, acting under the authority of the Lord Chancellor, should not deal as safely with all inquiries concerning a lunatic's estate, as a Master in Chancery. That they would deal with it at less cost, and with less delay, there cannot be very much doubt. Supposing, however, the objection well founded, the question reduces itself to this: whether it is better that a lunatic of small fortune should have a protection not quite perfect, or that he should be precluded from having any.

With regard to the other measure, for altering the Law of Evidence, we can only say, we are surprised that some such measure has not been long before brought forward. It is impossible to refer to the intricate head of the Law of Evidence, regarding the incompetency of witnesses, on the ground of infamy of character or interest, without seeing, that, in endeavouring to guard against the perpetration of injustice, by the admission of evidence from a tainted source, the law has introduced a greater chance of producing a failure of justice by shutting out the truth. The whole principle of shutting out evidence, on the ground of infamy of character, proceeds on a legal assumption, that the commission of certain crimes is evidence of so low a state of morality in the witness, as to make it impossible to believe him upon his oath; or, as it is expressed by Chief Baron Gilbert, that "the producing such a witness would be perfectly ineffectual, because the credit of his oath is overbalanced by the stain of iniquity." (Gilb. Evid. 146, 4th ed.). This assumption we take to be false in almost every particular. In the first place, it does not consist with a sound observation of human nature to assume, that the disposition to commit crime of one kind, affords any necessary inference of a disposition to commit crime of a totally different kind; that a man, for instance, has committed a murder or a theft, affords no solid ground for anticipating, that he will not speak the truth in matters, of course, unconnected with his particular crime; these several crimes flowing from distinct passions and dispositions of the mind, and from equally distinct external incitements. In the second place, by a low state of morality is meant, that mental state of the individual, in which he is governed by considerations of passion or self-interest, instead of considerations of justice; or, in other words, in which he is influenced by motives of pure selfishness, unchecked by any consideration of the rights of others. It is obvious, that a witness of such a character can have, in the absence of external inducements addressing themselves to his passions or interest, no greater bias towards falsehood than he has towards truth. Without, therefore, hearing him, or without collateral evidence of his interest or wishes in regard to the result of the cause, how is it possible to say, that the presumption against his credibility is so strong, that you cannot give any credence to what he shall say, and, therefore, you will not hear him at all?

A comparison of those circumstances, which, in practice, render a witness inadmissible, on the ground of infamy of character, and those which merely go to his credibility, shews the extreme absurdity of the rule of exclusion. Thus, for instance, treason, which, though a crime of the highest magnitude, and properly visited with the highest degree of punishment, is one, which all history shews to be consistent with great exaltation of character, goes to the competency of a witness; while a conviction for a conspiracy to commit a fraud, in raising the price of the funds by false reports, a crime flowing directly from a mean and lying disposition, goes only to the credibility. Again, though a conviction of the lowest degree of felony will render a witness incompetent, the strongest evidence of the utmost criminality, short of actual conviction, will not have that effect. Again, though a convicted felon is incompetent, yet, if he be pardoned, or have duly suffered his punishment, his competency is restored. Now, if we keep in mind that the ground of the incompetency is, that conviction, or the complete legal proof of the commission of a particular crime, is evidence of such moral depravity in the criminal, that the law will presume he would disregard the sanctity of an oath; it seems quite ridiculous to contend, that the pardon could make any real change in his quality as a witness. One can understand the technical and artificial reasoning, "that the pardon makes the witness a new creature, and gives him a new capacity," as applied to the restoration of his civil rights, in regard to acts which depend for their character upon their own intrinsic circumstances. But as to those acts of the criminal, such as his testimony, which depend for their character, not so much upon an incapacity, specifically given to him by the conviction, as upon a pre-existing moral taint, of which the conviction is only evidence, to hold that the Crown can, by its pardon, affect those acts with a new character, is to hold, that it has not merely power to restore civil rights, but a power to give to the criminal a new mind.

The rule of exclusion, as regards witnesses having an interest in the result of the cause, proceeds on an assumption, equally, as it appears to us, untenable: that is, it proceeds on the assumption, that a party so interested has so great a bias to speak against the truth, or, at least, towards partiality, that his testimony ought not to be taken. Now, in assuming this, we are wholly ignorant of a variety of circumstances necessary to be known in order to estimate the force of the supposed bias. We are ignorant of the value set directly, by the witness himself, on his interest. We are ignorant of the force of his sense of honour, and justice, and morality, or of his fear of disgrace and punishment. We are ignorant, in fact, of all those collateral circumstances, without which we cannot ascertain whether the interest of the witness amounts, in reality, to a bias at all.

There is, undoubtedly also, great practical difficulty in the application of the rule, in ascertaining what is such an interest as shall operate in exclusion of testimony; and one of the rules adopted, that any certain interest will so operate, but that an uncertain interest will not, has led to some palpable absurdities; because it is obvious, that there may be interests of great value legally uncertain, but morally certain, which might have a great effect in giving a bias; while, on the other hand, there may be interests certain in the law, and utterly valueless in fact, which could not, by possibility, bias any man's mind. But, in truth, it would be quite impracticable to fix any standard of quantity, or nature of interest, which could operate so as to render the application of the rule rational; because, from the infinite variety of men's characters and social positions, it probably never will happen, that the same kind or quantity of interest will have the same force in the minds of two different witnesses; and hence it must be, in every new case, impossible to know, whatever be the degree of apparent interest, whether the whole foundation of the doctrine, namely, the existence of a paramount bias, can be justly presumed. To admit the evidence of infamous or interested witnesses to go to a jury, unaccompanied by any observations from persons of superior judgment and acuteness, might, no doubt, be very dangerous; but there can be no danger in letting such evidence go to a jury, under the direction of an experienced Judge.

The Doctrine and Practice of Equity, or a Concise Outline, &c. By G. GOLDSMITH, A. M., Barrister at Law. Second Edition. [Saunders & Benning.]

It was said of an eminent singer, that she was the first of her style, but her style was not the first; and something of the same kind may be said of the work before us. Of its class, it is a very good one, but the class is one which we hold in great abhorrence, and could wish to see wholly annihilated. It has become the fashion of late years to popularize every thing; to employ all the ingenuity of which ingenious writers are capable, to abridge and dilute all learning; to sketch outlines of sciences, and aim at giving what are called general notions. Legal literature has been as much inundated as any other branch of literature with works of this class; and the present is another of the attempts to save all labour and difficulty to those to whom the exercise of labour, and the habit of meeting and conquering difficulty, are most essential qualifications.

If there be any science, in which knowledge to be useful must be particular, it is the science of the law. It is, it is true, governed generally by certain broad principles; but the exceptions are so numerous, and the distinctions so incessant and so fine, that law may be said to be made up of details. A brief outline of any large portion of it, such as the doctrines and practice of equity, is, of necessity, an incomplete, if not a false representation of the law. It is like a map without the mountains and cross roads; and though it may be correct as far as it goes, it tends, on the whole, more to mislead than to guide. We object to works of this kind, also, because they are apt to give to the student an unwholesome appetite for the facile; a sort of dilettante spirit, that would make an elegant play of that, which, to be mastered, must sooner or later be grappled with in the spirit of severe labour and irrepressible energy. Woe, we would say, to that lawyer, who shall commence his course of reading by epitomes, and graceful outlines of the law! far better had he plunge at once into the deep legal morass of Coke upon Littleton. He may be suffocated in the one case; but, in the other, he must be enervated.

Having said thus much against the class of work to which Mr. Goldsmith's is to be referred, we may add, that the execution of this particular work appears to us as good as the nature of it will admit. It is generally accurate, as far as its brevity will permit, and the statements of general principles are well and clearly put. So far, indeed, as the plan and limits of the work would allow, the author has touched upon some of the niceties of the subject in a very happy manner. The general doctrine as to costs, for instance, (no unimportant part of equitable knowledge), and the distinction between costs as between party and party, and costs as between solicitor and client, are extremely well explained. (See pp. 273 to 284).

On the whole, we can safely recommend the perusal of Mr. Goldsmith's work to those who like epitomes and outlines of the law; but, we trust, that, when next our learned author determines on writing a book, he will select some kind of work in which he may find more field for his own evident ability, and more opportunity of assisting the sound cultivation of legal knowledge.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, March 7.

Lord Campbell inquired, whether the Lord Chancellor had any Bills in preparation on the subject of the Bankruptcy and Ecclesiastical Courts.

The Lord Chancellor said, a Bill had been prepared on the subject of the Bankruptcy Court, which he would lay on the table on Monday, (the 14th). And a Bill had also been prepared on the subject of the Ecclesiastical Courts.

The Lord Chancellor gave notice of his intention to lay on the table, on the following day, a Bill to alter and amend the Law with respect to Proceedings in Lunacy.

Tuesday, March 8.

The Lord Chancellor, pursuant to notice, laid on the table a Bill to amend the Proceedings in Cases of Lunacy. The present state of the law was this: there were certain standing commissioners, to whom petitions in lunacy were referred. They were men most competent to the discharge of their duties; but their jurisdiction did not extend beyond twenty miles from the metropolis. Beyond that distance, commissions in lunacy were sent to persons of whom the Lord Chancellor had no knowledge, and who had little or no experience in such delicate matters; and the consequence was, sometimes, serious mistakes entailing heavy expense on the estates of the lunatics. The mode of payment of these commissions was by fees, which were charged on the estates of the lunatics; and hence arose a very formidable pressure on those estates; so great, indeed, as to deter the friends of all lunatics of small estate from applying to the Lord Chancellor, as they well know, that the expenses must so far consume the estate as to preclude an adequate allowance for the lunatic. The remedy which he proposed was, to appoint two permanent commissioners, who would preside in lunacy cases, both in town and in the country; they would be men of ability and distinction at the bar, and would be paid by fixed salaries instead of fees. Then, as to the juries: at present, lunacy cases were decided by a jury of twenty-four, as there must be the assent of twelve, at least, to make the inquiries and return their verdict. The twenty-four jurors acted in the nature of a grand jury. They were paid one guinea a day each for every day of the inquiry; and this, also, he need not say, entailed a very heavy expense on the estates of lunatics. To diminish this expense, he proposed to vest in the Lord Chancellor a discretionary power to have the cases tried, in certain cases, with a jury of twelve, who need not be unanimous in their finding. He proposed further, that, instead of the present system of a reference to a Master in Chancery, after the return of the inquisition, for the necessary inquiries, the commissioners should have power to make such inquiries as to the estate and effects of the lunatic, and such other matters as the Lord Chancellor should intrust them with; and, if difficulty should arise, then, that there should be a reference to the Master; as now. He proposed to abolish the office of the clerk of the custodies, and to transfer his duties to the secretary of lunatics, compensating the clerk of the custodies out of the suitors' fund. Finally, he proposed, that the two commissioners should be ex officio visitors of lunatics.

Lord Cottenham objected to compensating the clerk of the custodies out of the suitors' fund; he could not consent to apply the funds belonging to one class of suitors for the benefit of another, or to a purpose for which they were never intended. He objected also to removing lunatics' estates from the control of the Masters.

Lord Denman, in moving the second reading of the Bill for Improving the Law of Evidence, called the attention of the House to the present state of the law, and the nature of the change proposed. According to the present state of the Law, persons in any way directly interested in the result of a cause, as well as persons directly parties to it, were disqualified from giving evidence. He proposed to remove this disqualification in every case, except where the witness was a substantial party to the suit. He proposed this, in conformity with an opinion which he believed had strongly prevailed, that the evidence of interested witnesses should be received, as it was of the highest importance that all facts known to any individual should be laid before the jury, that they might themselves judge of the credit of the witness. With regard to the second portion of his Bill, which went to remove the objection to a witness, on the ground of crime, according to the law as it now stood, a person, convicted of certain crimes, had his lips closed as a witness for the rest of his days. But a witness might present himself in the box covered with crime, admitting himself guilty of the greatest offences, and, probably, betraying those very associates whom he might have tempted to commit the crimes with which they are charged. In the present state of the law, the lives of the accused might depend on the evidence of such a man as that. Look at the case of perjury,—a class of crime which appeared more than any other to disqualify a witness. In this class of cases, the disqualification depended on a variety of circumstances besides the fact of guilt. If the person, wishing to get rid of the evidence of a perjured witness, could not prove his disqualification by presenting a record of his conviction, he was not disqualified. Again, if pardoned, he might be heard again, notwithstanding a conviction. The objection was, that the punishment did not fall on the party guilty of perjury, but on the party wanting the benefit of his evidence. He proposed, also, to admit a certain denomination of Baptists to the privilege of giving evidence on affirmation.

After some observations by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham, and Lord Wynford, it was agreed, that the Bill ought not to be proceeded with till after the circuit; and it was accordingly read a second time, and ordered to be committed the first Thursday after the recess.

Thursday, March 10.

Lord Denman laid on the table a Bill for rendering the Affirmation of that Sect of Christians, called Baptists, equivalent to an Oath in Courts of Justice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, March 8.

Lord F. Egerton, in a speech of considerable length, moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend the Statute of 1835, (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54), relating to Marriages within the prohibited Degrees; his Bill was nearly identical with that brought in last year in the House of Lords, by a noble lord now high in the service of the Queen's Government. He would state at once, that the Bill he proposed to introduce, would enable a widower to marry the sister of his deceased wife. His Lordship then went on to discuss the matter, under the double aspect of its theological and its social propriety.

Sir R. Inglis opposed the motion; and, after some short observations from other members, the debate was adjourned to that day week.

ABSTRACT OF LORD MAHON'S BILL TO AMEND THE LAW OF COPYRIGHT.

Sect. 1 repeals former acts.

2. Interpretation clause.

3. Enacts, That the copyright in every book which shall, after the passing of this act, be published in the lifetime of its author, shall endure for the natural life of such author, and for the further term of twenty-five years, commencing at the time of his death, and shall be the property of such author and his assigns; and that the copyright in every book which shall be published after the death of its author shall endure for the term of thirty years from the first publication thereof, and shall be the property of the proprietor of the manuscript from which such book shall be first published, and his assigns.

4. And whereas it is just to extend the benefits of this act to authors of books published before the passing thereof, and in which copyright still subsists: be it enacted, That the copyright which at the time of passing this act shall subsist in any book theretofore published (except as hereinafter mentioned) shall be extended and endure for the full term provided by this act, in cases of books thereafter published, and shall be the property of the person who, at the time of passing of this act, shall be the proprietor of such copyright: Provided always, That in all cases in which such copyright shall belong, in whole or in part, to a publisher or other person who shall have acquired it for other consideration than that of natural love and affection, such copyright shall not be extended by this act, but shall endure for the term which shall subsist therein at the time of passing of this act, and no longer, unless the author of such book if he shall be living, or the personal representative of such author if he shall be dead, and the proprietor of such copyright, shall, before the expiration of such term, consent and agree to accept the benefits of this act in respect of such book, and shall cause a minute of such consent to be entered in the book of registry hereinafter directed to be kept, in which case such copyright shall endure for the full term by this act provided in cases of books to be published after the passing of this act, and shall be the property of such person or persons, and subject to such conditions as in such minute shall be expressed.

5. And whereas it is expedient to provide against the suppression of books of importance to the public: be it enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Judicial Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council, on complaint made to them that the proprietor of the copyright in any book after the death of its author has refused to republish or to allow the republication of the same, and that by reason of such refusal such book may be withheld from the public, to grant a license to such complainant to publish such book, in such manner and subject to such conditions as they may think fit, and that it shall be lawful for such complainant to publish such book according to such license.

6. One copy of every book to be delivered at the British Museum.

7. Mode of delivering at the British Museum.

8. A copy of every book to be delivered within a month after demand for the use of the following Libraries:—Bodleian Library; Public Library at Cambridge; Advocates of Edinburgh; Trinity College, Dublin.

10. Penalty for default in delivering copies for the use of the libraries.

11. Book of registry to be kept at Stationers' Hall.

12. Party making or causing to be made a false entry in the book of registry to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

13. Entries of copyright may be made in the book of registry.

14. If any person be aggrieved by any entry in the book of registry, he may apply to the Lord Chancellor, Master of the Rolls, Vice-Chancellor, Courts of Law in term, or any Judge in vacation, who may order such entry to be varied or expunged.

15. Remedy for the piracy of books or parts of books by action on the case. Provide, that, in Scotland, the offender shall be liable to an action in the court of session in Scotland.

16. In actions for piracy, the defendant to give notice in writing of the objections to the plaintiff's title on which he means to rely.

17. Mode of proving the publication and identity of books in proceedings for piracy.

19. Copyright in Encyclopedias, periodical works, and works published in series, to be in the publisher or conductor thereof, and proof of payment to the parties employed by him to be prima facie evidence of his property in their articles*. Proviso, securing the right of authors who have reserved the right of publishing their articles in a separate form.

20. Proprietors of Encyclopedias, periodical works, and works published in series, to be at liberty to enter at once at Stationers' Hall, and thereon to have the benefit of the registration of the whole work.

21. The provisions of 3 & 4 Will. 4 extended to musical compositions, and the term of copyright, as provided by this act, applied to the liberty of representing dramatic pieces and musical compositions.

22. The proprietor of the right of dramatic representation shall have all the remedies given by the act 3 & 4 Will. 4.

THE COPYRIGHT BILL.

We have often had occasion to comment on the singular looseness with which Bills in Parliament are drawn; but the Bill now before us seems really as if it were intended to shew how entirely reckless of all accuracy, the framer of a Bill may be, without losing parliamentary caste.

With the principle of the Bill, we have nothing to do; we neither applaud nor disapprove it. For though we may have an opinion, whether it is just and expedient, on principle, to extend the term of enjoyment of copyright, yet we conceive it to be so very problematical, whether practically any substantial change will be effected in the interests of authors or the public by the proposed change of the law, that we hold it a matter of very slight importance whether the law is changed or not. But, as members of the community bound by the laws, and still more as lawyers called upon to explain them, we have a wish, and we submit that it is not an unreasonable one, to see laws passed in such a shape, that their objects and effects may be at least intelligible, if they are not absolutely certain. Let us see how far the Bill which is now before the Legislature, for altering the Law of Copyright, fulfils these conditions.

The first material clause (sect. 3) is sufficiently plain. In the case of any book published after the passing of the Act, during the lifetime of the author, it gives the copyright to the author and his assigns, for the life of the author, and twenty-five years afterwards; and if the book be published after the death of the author, then to the proprietor of the manuscript for thirty years from the first publication thereof. Thus much as to books published after the Act. The next section deals with books published before the passing of the Act; and of that also the meaning is to be collected with tolerable certainty, although it is expressed in singularly circuitous language. As we understand it, it will have this effect: that, where an author has in himself the copyright of his work at the time of the passing of the Act, there, he will, under the Act, have his term extended to the same term as if the Act had been in force when he published his work. But if the copyright was, at the passing of the Act, vested in any person as a purchaser, (the words of the clause are, "in all cases in which such copyright shall belong, in whole or in part, to a publisher or other person, who shall have acquired it for other consideration than that of natural love and affection"), then the copyright is to endure only so long as it would have endured under the old law, unless the author, or his personal representative, and the proprietor of the copyright, agree to accept the benefit of the Act, which they may do by registering a minute of such consent under subsequent clauses of the Act.

We now come to the 4th clause, intended it seems to meet the objection taken last year to Mr. Serjeant Talfour's Bill, that, if copyright were greatly prolonged after the death of an author, valuable works might be withdrawn from the public store of information by the scruples of the descendants of such author. This clause therefore, enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the Judicial Committee of her Majesty's Privy Council, on complaint made to them, that the proprietor of the copyright in any book, after the death of its author, has refused to republish or to allow the republication of the same, and that by reason of such refusal such book may be withheld from the public, to grant a license to such complainant to publish such book, in such manner and subject to such conditions as they may think fit; and that it shall be lawful for such complainant to publish such book according to such license."

Now, much as it has been the fashion of late, in law bills, to cut the Gordian knot in all cases of difficulty, by giving a sort of discretionary jurisdiction to the Privy Council, we do not remember any bill in which it has been thought expedient to vest in any tribunal so wide and vaguely defined an authority. Observe what the duty prescribed to the Judicial Committee is; it shall be lawful for them, "on complaint;" not on complaint supported by affidavits, or other proof, but simply on complaint;—And of what kind of wrong is the complaint to be? Not that the proprietor of the copyright has perverted, and for a lengthened period, refused to permit the republication of his work; not that, it being shewn that he might prudently and advantageously as regarded his own pecuniary interests have republished, he has without any sufficient reason refused to do so, and that, by such continued refusal the public are deprived of the book, and are de facto damnified; but simply, "that he has refused; and that by reason of such refusal such book may be withheld from the public." So that on any one making a complaint, that the proprietor of a copyright has refused to republish, with or without a particle of evidence as to the causes and extent of such refusal, without any inquiry whether it was founded on the proprietor's just calculations of the commercial inexpediency of then republishing, or whether it was a long continued and perverse refusal; provided the allegation is, that the unfortunate proprietor has refused simpliciter, and further, that by reason of such refusal the book may be withheld from the public, the Judicial Committee will have authority to grant a licence to the complainant to publish the book.

Now, we know very well, that the Judicial Committee would not be likely, in practice, to assume the jurisdiction which, if we are right in the construction of this clause, would be conferred upon it. We know, that it would probably not receive a petition under the Act, without allegations much more material and pertinent to the matter of the injury anticipated to the public, than those which seem alone prescribed by the Bill; and we admit, that it would probably lay down such rules and regulations for governing applications of this nature, as should restrict its own jurisdiction in practice to the case of a specific injury to the public, arising out of the unreasonable and wanton withholding of a book by the proprietor. In other words, we believe, that, the effect of the clause being to enact, that, whenever the proprietor of a copyright refuses to republish it, it shall be lawful for the Judicial Committee to inquire into the matter, and do as it thinks fit, the Judicial Committee would, in consistence with the principles which in modern times govern Courts of Justice, limit the circumstances, under which it would entertain applications, by a reference to the substantial matter of wrong intended to be provided against. But, we submit that, first, it is not usual, in modern times, to arm any Court with such absolute and totally discretionary powers; and secondly, that, if it be the intention of Clause 4 of this Bill so to arm the Judicial Committee, it would be better that it should do so in terms. But if, as we believe, the framers of the Clause had no such intention, then we submit, with great deference, that it will become necessary to re-draw it from beginning to end.

We will next take up the 19th clause. Of this, the marginal note is thus stated: "Copyright in encyclopedias, periodical works, and works published in series, to be in the publisher or conductor thereof; and proof of payment to the parties employed by him, to be prima facie evidence of his property in their articles: proviso, securing the right of authors who have reserved the right of publishing their articles in a separate form." Now, what says the clause itself? "Be it enacted, that, when any publisher or other person shall, before or at the time of the passing of this Act, have projected, conducted, and carried on, or shall hereafter project, conduct, and carry on, any encyclopedia, review, magazine, periodical work, or work published in a series of books or parts, or any book whatsoever; and shall have employed or shall employ any persons to compose the same, or any volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions thereof, for publication in or as part of the same, and such work, volumes, parts, essays, articles, or portions, shall have been or shall hereafter be composed under such employment, on the terms, that the copyright therein shall belong to such projector, publisher or conductor, and paid for by such projector, publisher or conductor, the copyright in every such encyclopedia, review, magazine, periodical work, and work published in a series of books or parts, and in every volume, part, essay, article and portion so composed and paid for, and such projector, publisher or conductor shall have all the remedies by this Act provided for the proprietors of copyright, shall be the property of such projector, publisher or other conductor, who shall enjoy the same rights as if he were the actual author thereof, and shall have such term of copyright therein as is given to the authors of books by this act*: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect the right of any person who shall have been or who shall be so employed as aforesaid, to publish any such his composition in a separate form, who, by any contract, express or implied, may have reserved or may hereafter reserve to himself such right; but every author reserving, retaining or having such right, shall be entitled to the copyright in such composition when published in a separate form, according to this Act, without prejudice to the right of such projector, publisher or conductor as aforesaid."

The clause, therefore, in the introductory part, makes the copyright of the projector or conductor of the Encyclopedia, &c., depend on the union of two circumstances: first, his having employed any persons to compose it; and, secondly, the articles, essays, &c., having been composed on the terms that the copyright shall belong to the projector, and be paid for by him. So far, therefore, from directly vesting the copyright in the projector, or from making the payment by him for the separate articles, &c., any evidence of the copyright being in him, it seems to oust, inferentially, his claim to such copyright, unless the articles have been furnished under a specific contract, that he shall have copyright in them. But then follows the concluding proviso, saving the right of an author to preserve to himself, by special contract, the right of separately publishing his contributions. We have, therefore, here, a clause, the first part of which, by inference, leaves the copyright in a contribution to a periodical work in the writer, unless, by contract, he has deprived himself of it; while the latter part, by inference, takes the copyright out of the writer, unless he shall, by specific contract, have reserved it to himself. We do not envy the Judge who shall be called upon to construe, judicially, this clause.

We have passed over the whole of the registry clauses, which require no particular commentary of this character; and we come next, and lastly, to the 28th. This has in view, as it would seem, the giving and regulating of powers to proceed, by way of injunction, to restrain the piracy of works. We would first observe, that there is an obvious oblivion, in the commencement of the clause, (which gives powers to the Lord Chancellor and the Vice-Chancellor), of the fact, that, under and by virtue, and in consequence of a certain act, made and passed, &c., in the last session of the late Parliament, there is now no such person as the Vice-Chancellor, but that there are three Vice-Chancellors. This is, however, a mere trifle, and no otherwise deserving of notice, than as part and parcel of the general inaccuracy which pervades the bill. In substance the clause appears intended to give to the Courts of Equity in England and Ireland, upon application by petition in a summary way, and to the Courts of Common Law in England and Ireland, and certain other Courts, on application by motion in a summary way, supported by affidavit, &c., to make such orders for the issuing of an injunction, or for the continuing and enforcing, or dissolving such injunction, "as, according to the course and practice of each of such Courts respectively, can or may now be made in a suit regularly instituted;" and also to make such order for an account, as, according to the course and practice of each such Court can or may now be made.

We are of course bound to presume, that the framers of the Bill are aware, that, according to the course and practice of the Courts of Common Law, they do not act by way of injunction at all; and that, consequently, to enact, that they shall make such orders for the granting, continuing, or dissolving injunctions, as by their course and practice they now can or may, is to enact, that they shall do nothing. What therefore is the intention of the reference in this clause to the Courts of Common Law, we are at a loss to conceive. With regard to its effect on the practice of the Courts of Equity, it seems intended to give them power to grant injunctions, either ex parte or on notice, and the consequential account in matters of literary piracy, in a summary way, without the regular institution of a suit.

Whether this is an improvement or not we shall not now minutely inquire. We will, however, observe, that, as the chief source of expense of obtaining an injunction does not depend in general on the circumstance of a suit being instituted by bill, but on the extent and expense of evidence, and the consequential expenses of the proceedings in Court, the total expense will probably be scarcely diminished by proceeding on petition in a summary way. And with regard to the necessity of summary protection for the owners of copyright, if the present mode of proceeding by ex parte injunction is not summary enough to satisfy the most intense craving for protection, we know not how the owners of copyright are to be satisfied.

OUR readers will perceive by the Parliamentary Summary, that Lord F. Egerton's Bill, for altering the Law of Marriage, is thrown out. For the present, therefore, Lord Lyndhurst's Act, (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54), remains the law as regards marriages within the prohibited degrees. We have not offered in this journal, nor do we mean to offer, any opinion on the question, either of the morality or expediency of the proposed change; but we wish to point out an error which has very much pervaded the whole debate, with respect to the effect of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. It seems to have been assumed by many honorable, but not learned members, that the restriction on marriages between persons within certain degrees of affinity took its rise from the date of that Act only; and that, moreover, that Act was specially directed against marriages between a widower and the deceased wife's sister, or a widow and the deceased husband's brother.—Whereas, in fact, certain marriages, and among others those alluded to, were forbidden, though not void if contracted, by the Statute Law, (see the 25 Hen. 8, c. 22; 28 Hen. 8, c. 7; and 32 Hen. 8, c. 38), as well as by the Canon Law. The Act of 5 & 6 Will. 4 did not profess to prohibit anything de novo, but merely to settle the law, and to give force to antecedent prohibitions. It had merely in view, (we speak of course, as lawyers, of the intention to be collected from the Act itself), to make valid those marriages already contracted, which, under the then existing state of the law, were voidable, but not void; and to render in future, absolutely void, marriages within the degrees, which the law then considered as too near, in point either of consanguinity or affinity. The Act does not, in terms, refer to any specific kind of prohibited marriage, but applies to all marriages then prohibited.

PARTNERSHIP AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

It is a well-known rule of English law, that several persons may so conduct themselves with reference to a particular business or adventure, as to become mutually liable to the public for the acts of each other, as partners, although, as among themselves, none of the incidents of a partnership may exist. Contracts of partnership may be varied in an infinite variety of ways, so far as the mutual rights of the partners are concerned; but when once the fact of partnership as to third persons is established, the rights and liabilities of the parties, with respect to such third persons, follow as a matter of course, and are governed by uniform and invariable rules. If the contract or dealing between the parties is such as to constitute a partnership between themselves, a fortiori it is sufficient to make them liable as partners to the world. Where the contract of partnership does not exist between the parties themselves, one of them may become liable to the world as partner, either by holding himself forth as such, and thereby inducing persons to give credit to the firm, on the assumption that each of its ostensible members is answerable; or by participating in the profits of the business, and thereby enjoying the same advantages which he would enjoy if he were actually, and by agreement with the ostensible members of the firm, a partner. The grounds upon which the liability of an ostensible partner rests are obvious enough; and this class of cases affords scarcely any matter for remark—the question in each case being simply, whether the conduct of the person sought to be charged as partner has been such as to amount to a holding of himself out as a partner. (See Spencer v. Billing, 3 Camp. 310; Ex parte Matthews, 3 Ves. & B. 125; Goode v. Harrison, 5 B. & Ald. 147; Parker v. Barker, 3 J. B. Moore, 226; Fox v. Clifton, 4 M. & P. 676). If the party has not held himself out generally as partner, yet he will be liable to any particular person, upon a single representation to him, that he stands in that character. (De Bertröm v. Smith, 1 Esp. 29). Whether a defendant can be charged as ostensible partner by a plaintiff, who is proved to have been ignorant of such apparent partnership, does not appear to be quite settled. Lord Mansfield, in the case of Young v. Astell, (2 Hen. Black. 242), seems to have thought, that the plaintiff's ignorance of the defendant's ostensible character would be immaterial; but as the defendant in that case appeared to have an actual interest as partner, the question did not fairly arise. As the liability of a nominal partner is wholly founded on the circumstance that credit is given on account of his supposed liability, it should seem, on principle, that where it is shown that the creditor could never have relied on such liability, it would not arise. And this view of the rule is sanctioned by what fell from Parke, J., in the case of Dickinson v. Velpey, (10 B. & Cr. 140; 5 Man. & Ry. 188), where an attempt was made to fix the defendant with liability as partner in a mining company. The learned Judge said, "If it could have been proved, that the defendant had held himself out to be a partner, not 'to the world,' for that is a loose expression, but to the plaintiff himself, or under such circumstances of publicity as to satisfy a jury, that the plaintiff knew of and believed him to be a partner, he would be liable to the plaintiff in all transactions in which he had engaged, and gave credit to the defendant, upon the faith of his being such partner—the defendant would be bound by an indirect representation to the plaintiff arising from his conduct, as much as if he had stated to him directly, and in express terms, that he was a partner, and the plaintiff had acted upon that statement." And of course, if the plaintiff had notice by himself, or by his partners, before he gave credit to the firm, that the defendant had no real interest in it, that would be sufficient to prevent his succeeding in an action in which the defendant should be joined. (Alderson v. Pope, 1 Camp. 404).

With regard to the second class, that of dormant partners, more difficulty exists; for the grounds upon which persons who participate in the profits of a business, are rendered liable to the engagements in that business of the ostensible partners, are by no means settled in a satisfactory manner. "The principle," says a learned writer*, "upon which this liability is founded, is, that, by sharing the profits, he takes part of the fund to which the creditor has a right to resort for payment; in short, that, as he is to enjoy the profits of the concern if it prospers, he ought to bear its burdens if it does not; according to the well-known maxim, 'qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus.' It is true, the creditor has not trusted the firm on his responsibility; but, inasmuch as the person whom he has trusted, (i. e. the ostensible trader), is the less able to satisfy the creditor's demand on account of his connexion with the person in question, it is fair that that connexion should entail on the latter the responsibility of partner. The consequence of a contrary doctrine would be, that a man might enjoy nine-tenths of the profits of the business for twenty years, and, in the twenty-first year, when the ostensible trader, impoverished by this exhausting absorption of his income, was no longer able to meet his engagements, the secret partner would come forth from his obscurity, merely to exhibit to the deluded creditors the channel through which the profits of the business, whose known prosperity had induced their confidence, had irreversibly passed away." A different reason was assigned by Lord

Mansfield, in the case of Hoare v. Dawes, (1 Dougl. 372); "The law," said that eminent, but not always accurate, judge, "with respect to dormant partners, is not disputed; namely, that they are liable, when discovered; because they would otherwise receive usurious interest without any risk." But it is evident, that the rule is not necessarily connected with any statutory restrictions upon the rate of interest for money, but is a principle of common law, which equally subsists now that the usury laws are suspended, so far as they fetter commercial contracts, as it did when they were in full force. The reason first stated above from Mr. Jarman, is undoubtedly the true one; and has been frequently referred to from the bench, and in text books; yet it is far from being satisfactory, or free from difficulty in its application. It is clear, that, if a business were expected to yield 30% per cent. of annual profit on the capital employed, and on that expectation a capitalist were to advance a large sum to the person carrying on the business, with a stipulation that he should receive 25% per cent. annually upon his money, if the business should yield so much, this would not create a partnership; nor would it now be impeachable upon the ground of usury; and yet, all the mischief that could be apprehended from a dormant partnership would be just as likely to arise in this case as in that put by Mr. Jarman in the passage cited above. Another objection is, that the rule goes far beyond the evil which it is intended to remedy; for if the dormant partner is to be made liable simply on the ground of the withdrawal of the fund to which future creditors would otherwise resort, his liability should not exceed the amount actually received by him, instead of being, as it is, unlimited. But the weakness of the doctrine is principally perceived, when it comes to be applied to contracts for the remuneration of clerks, agents, &c., by a salary proportioned to the profits of the business. Upon the effect of such contracts, the authorities are by no means harmonious or satisfactory. Indeed, so finely have distinctions been drawn, that it has been laid down by Lord Eldon, (Ex parte Hemper, 17 Ves. 404), that, "if a man stipulates, as the reward of his labour, that he shall have, not a specific interest in the business, but a given sum of money, even in proportion to a given quantum of the profits, that will not make him a partner; but, if he agrees for part of the profits, as such, giving him a right to an account, though having no property in that capital, he is, as to third persons, a partner." How can a person be entitled to a sum proportioned to the profits, and not have a right to an account? However, nothing more sensible than this can be deduced from the cases. Thus, in Dry v. Boswell, (1 Camp. 329), the owner of a lighter having agreed to give the person who worked it one half of the gross earnings for his labour, it was held, that there was no partnership between the two: yet, if taking a share in the net profits is an injury to prospective creditors, surely taking a share in the gross receipts is more so. So, the usual mode of paying seamen in the whale fisheries by a share in the produce, does not make them partners. (Wilkinson v. Fraser, 4 Esp. 182; Mair v. Glennie, 4 Man. & Sel. 249). But where A. and B., ship agents at different ports, agreed to share the profits of their commissions, and the discount on bills for repairs of ships consigned to them, and sums received for warehouse rent, after deducting one-fifth for warehouse rent, but that each party should bear his own losses, it was held, that this, though not a partnership between the parties, rendered them liable to the world as partners. (Waugh v. Carver, 2 H. Bl. 235; See Geddes v. Wallace, 2 Bligh, 270; Green v. Beesley, 2 Scott, 164; Bond v. Pittard, 3 Mee. & W. 357; Burnell v. Hunt, 5 Jur. 680).

Mr. Justice Story, in his recent and scientific work on Partnership, has taken great pains to illustrate and defend the distinction laid down by Lord Eldon, but at a length which precludes quotation. We shall content ourselves, therefore, with referring our readers to that work, as well as to Mr. Collyer's valuable chapter on the same subject; and conclude by expressing, with much diffidence, our own opinion, that this point in the law of dormant partnerships has still to be settled by adjudication.

* 7 Jarman's Conveyancing, p. 5.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, March 14.

The Lord Chancellor laid on the table a Bill for the Improvement of the Proceedings in Bankruptcy. His Lordship stated, shortly, that it was, in its provisions, like that which had been introduced by the late Lord Chancellor.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, March 16.

Mr. R. Timmes moved the second reading of the Copyright of Designs Bill in a speech of considerable length.

Dr. Ansell, approving the principle of the Bill, objected to the proposed plan of giving the right of adjudication, in cases of infringement of the copyright, to justices of the peace, persons, in his opinion, not at all qualified; and, on that ground, he feared the Bill would only lead to litigation and embarrassment.

Mr. M. Phillips thought, there would be great difficulty in determining what really were inventions in design; in many cases, designs were brought from France, and then published here as original.

Mr. Heathcote objected also to the machinery of the Bill. By making a certificate given to the owner of a design prima facie evidence of its originality, and by other of its details, it would render every manufacturer and shopkeeper in England liable to penalties for invasion of copyright.

The Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed for the 15th April.

Lord Malm moved the second reading of the Copyright Bill, which was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Wednesday, the 23rd.

The debate on the Law of Marriages was resumed; and after a somewhat lengthened discussion, in which Mr. C. Buller, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Sir W. Follett took active parts, the Bill was thrown out.

LONDON, EDINBURGH, and DUBLIN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, 3, Charlotte-row, Mansion-house, and 55, Chancery-lane, London.

Important improvements have been introduced by this Company, whereby the mode of obtaining Policies is simplified, all doubts as to their validity are removed, and their application is much extended.

One-half of the Premiums may remain unpaid for Seven Years: thus allowing a Policy to be dropped at one half of the usual sacrifice, and entitling the assured, at a future period, when loss of health may prevent him from obtaining a New Assurance, to continue a Policy for double the amount of the sum for which he has paid premiums.

LONDON, MARCH 26, 1842.

It has occurred to us, that we should render an acceptable service to many of our readers, particularly to those who have not yet had much opportunity of watching the proceedings of Parliament, if we were to point out, as briefly as possible, some of the more prominent points in the practice of the House of Commons in regard to public Bills; for, we believe, that many, even among lawyers, find themselves frequently at a loss correctly to estimate the state of proceedings in Parliament, in regard to those measures in which they take interest, owing to their attention not having been directed to any safe sources of information explaining the course of Parliamentary proceedings. In drawing up the following very brief heads, we have consulted chiefly Mr. HATFIELD's elaborate work, on Parliamentary Proceedings, and a concise Epitome, on the same subject, by Mr. HAMMOND, published in 1825, to which we refer those of our readers who wish more ample information.

The first step to a public Bill, unless it be a Bill of Supply, or of Charge upon the subject, is a motion for leave to bring it in; this may be made by any Member who thinks fit. The introduction of the Bill may be, though it is not usually, opposed on the motion for leave to bring it in (as was the case on the very recent motion for leave to bring in a Bill for altering the Law of Marriage). If the House reject the motion, the Bill must then be dropped for that Session. If the House assent, it is ordered to be prepared and brought in.

It is prepared by being drawn out on paper with blanks, for such matters as must be inserted by Parliament, such as dates, penalties, and the like.

It is then presented to the House, and must pass through five distinct stages, viz. first, the first reading; secondly, the second reading; thirdly, commitment; fourthly, third reading; and, fifthly, motion, that it do pass.

The Bill may be, and usually is, read the first time on its being presented; but it may be ordered to be read for the first time on a subsequent day. The second reading is usually appointed for a subsequent day, but it may immediately follow the first.

After the second reading, the Bill is committed, viz. referred to a committee; which may consist of a certain number of members selected by the House; or of all the members; and it is then called a committee of the whole House: and this is done by the Speaker, in consequence of a motion to that effect, leaving the chair; whereupon, another member being appointed chairman, the House then sits and debates as a committee. The Speaker may sit and debate in such committee as a private Member.

In committee, the Bill is debated clause by clause; amendments are made; blanks filled up; and though it is generally understood, that the proper function of a committee is to discuss and settle the details of a Bill whose principle has been adopted by the House, yet, in fact, the Bill may obviously, and sometimes is, wholly changed in committee by a succession of alterations affecting all the material clauses.

After the Bill has gone through the committee, the chairman reports it, as altered therein, to the House; and the House then reconsiders the whole Bill. The question is put on every clause and amendment; and it is open to members, at this stage, again to debate, clause by clause, the whole of the Bill.

When the House has agreed, finally, to the Bill, as amended by the committee, or as altered by amendments of its own, it is ordered to be ingrossed, which is done by writing it, in an ingrossing hand, on slips or rolls of parchment. It is then to be read a third time; and, on the motion for this reading, it may again be opposed, in whole or in part. If the Bill be read a third time, the Speaker finally puts the question, whether it shall pass; and if that question be determined in the affirmative, the title of the Bill is settled, and it is then carried up to the House of Lords, where it passes through the same, or nearly the same, forms, as in the House of Commons.

When the House makes an amendment after the Bill is ingrossed, the additional matter is, in bills not of supply or charge, made by adding a rider, or additional piece of parchment to the roll, on which the additional matter is ingrossed. But, on bills of supply, or charge on the subject, the proposition for the charge must be referred to a committee of the whole House, and reported on by such committee; in other words, no resolution or vote can pass for imposing a charge on the subject, which is not founded on the report of a committee of the whole House; and that, whether to charge the subject is the sole object of the Bill, or that of a particular clause only; and whether the charge is by way of tax, or of penalty for an offence; and whether such imposition is direct or indirect. Hence, if any additional charge is proposed after the report on a Bill, such charge cannot be imposed by a rider; but the Bill must be re-committed. But the particular clause only, in which the additional charge is to be introduced, need be re-committed.

With regard to the Mode of conducting the Proceedings.

It is a rule, that no member should speak twice to the same question; this rule is, however, constantly evaded, if not broken, by the practice of informing the House of a fact, or explaining; under cover of which modes of proceeding, few who pay attention to the proceedings in Parliament are unaware, that, practically, members speak much more than once to the same question. According to the strict rules of the House, every member is entitled to be heard without interruption; and it is the duty of the Speaker to endeavour, by the exercise of his interposition, to procure for him an attentive hearing. This rule, is also practically neglected; and has been, in fact, obsolete for more than two centuries, as appears from the following story, related in Mr. Hatsell's Precedents, vol. 2, 107:—"Serjeant Heale speaking, said, 'the Queen hath as much right to all our lands and goods as to the revenue of her crown;' at which all the House hemmed and laughed and talked. 'Well,' quoth Serjt. Heale, 'all your hemming shall not put me out of countenance.' So Mr. Speaker stood up and said, 'It is a great disorder that this should be used, for it is the ancient use of every man to be silent when any one speaketh, and he that is speaking should be suffered to deliver his mind without interruption;' so the Serjeant proceeded, and when he had spoken a little while, the House hemmed again, and so he sat down." (A. D. 1601).

The modern practice of the House appears to be in accordance with this precedent; that is, every member is entitled to a patient hearing when he can obtain it, and no longer.

To obtain the sense of the House on any question, the practice is, that the member who desires it, frames his question in writing, and delivers it to the Speaker, who, when the member has moved it, and it has been seconded, preposes it to the House, and the House is then said to be in possession of the question; and that question cannot afterwards be withdrawn, but by leave of the House. When the House wishes, however, to get rid of a question without giving any opinion upon it, it cannot be done by moving any other question; because, regularly, that question which is first moved and seconded is to be first put; and, therefore, the question which it is sought to get rid of has precedence over every other. But there are three ways of obtaining the object of dismissing the question before the House, for that day at least. The first is by some member moving an adjournment; the second, by his moving that the orders of the day be read; and the third, by moving the previous question.

The motion to adjourn has this effect, because it takes precedence of any motion or question before made or proposed. But it must be simply to "adjourn," and not to adjourn to any particular day. The next mode, by moving the orders of the day, is for the orders generally, and not for any particular order; and, if carried, the orders of the day are to be read, and proceeded on in the order in which they stand. The principle on which the motion for the orders of the day puts an end, if carried, to any question before the House, seems, that prima facie, the orders or regular business of the day take precedence of all other proceedings; for, if the House is proceeding, not on a special question, but on one of the orders of the day, then that proceeding cannot be interrupted by a motion for the orders of the day. The third mode, though somewhat mystic and unintelligible at first sight, is, in reality, very simple. "The effect of it, says Mr. Hatsell, (Vol. 2, p. 115), is only to put off the coming to that question at that time, and is in these words: 'that this question be now put.' If the previous question is negatived, so as to put off the main question to another day, the same question, though altered in words, if not essentially and substantially altered in matter, ought not to be put again that day." Moving the previous question is, therefore, in effect, putting to the House as a preliminary question, whether the question, then in course of debate, shall be put at all; and, of course, if the preliminary inquiry be answered in the negative, the subsequent one falls to the ground.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, March 21.

The Lord Chancellor laid on the table a Bill to define the Jurisdiction of Justices at General Quarter Sessions of the Peace.

ABSTRACT OF A BILL FOR THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW OF BANKRUPTCY.

Sect. 1. Whereas it is expedient to amend the law of bankruptcy: And whereas by an act passed in the 1 & 2 Will. 4, [c. 56], intituled "An Act to establish a Court in Bankruptcy," various alterations were made in the administration of the law of bankruptcy, which have by experience been found beneficial, and it is advisable to extend the provisions and regulations contained in the said act: Be it therefore enacted, &c., That the provisions of this act, unless where otherwise herein specially provided, shall commence and take effect from and after the — day of — next.

2. Laws at variance with this act repealed.

3. Petitioning creditor's bond may be dispensed with if the Lord Chancellor shall think fit; and in such case it shall be lawful to issue the fiat without any such bond having been given.

4. That every fiat in bankruptcy granted after the commencement of this act shall, after the granting of such fiat, be forthwith issued and transmitted by the Lord Chancellor's secretary of bankrupts, in such manner as the Lord Chancellor by any general or other order shall direct, to the court to which such fiat shall be directed under and by virtue of the powers of any act now in force or of this act: Provided always, that no such fiat shall be issued to the petitioning creditor, or his attorney or agent.

5. Person against whom a fiat in bankruptcy has issued, on proof of probable cause for believing that he is about to quit England, or to remove or conceal his goods with intent to defraud creditors, may be arrested under the warrant of the court authorized to act in the prosecution of such fiat.

6. That it shall be lawful for any person arrested upon any such warrant, or for any person whose books, papers, monies, securities for monies, goods, or chattels have been seized under any such warrant, to apply at any time after such arrest or seizure to such court for an order or rule on the petitioning creditor named in such fiat to shew cause why the person arrested should not be discharged out of custody, or why his books, papers, monies, securities for monies, goods, and chattels should not be delivered up to him; and that it shall be lawful for such court to make absolute or discharge such order or rule, and to direct the costs of the application to be paid by either party: Provided that any such order may be discharged or varied by the Court of Review, on application made thereto by either party dissatisfied with such order.

7. That no person shall be liable to become bankrupt by reason of any act of bankruptcy committed more than twelve months prior to the issuing of any fiat in bankruptcy against him.

8. That no fiat in bankruptcy shall be deemed invalid by reason of any act of bankruptcy of the person against whom the adjudication of bankruptcy thereunder shall be made having been concerted or agreed upon between the bankrupt and any creditor or other person, save and except where any petition to supersede a fiat for any such cause shall have been already presented, and shall be now pending.

9. That the amount of the debt or debts of any creditor or creditors petitioning for a fiat in bankruptcy shall hereafter be as follows, that is to say, the single debt of such creditor, or of two or more persons being partners, petitioning for the same, shall amount to 50*l.* or upwards; and the debt of two creditors so petitioning shall amount to 70*l.* or upwards, and the debt of three or more creditors so petitioning shall amount to 100*l.* or upwards; and that every person who has given credit to any trader upon valuable consideration for any sum payable at a certain time, which time shall not have arrived when such trader committed an act of bankruptcy, may so petition or join in petitioning as aforesaid, whether he shall have had any security in writing for such sum or not.

10. That all livery-stable-keepers, coach-proprietors, carriers, ship-owners, auctioneers, apothecaries, market-gardeners, cow-keepers, brick-makers, alum-makers, lime-burners, and millers, shall be deemed traders, and subject and liable as traders to this and to the other statutes relating to bankrupts.

11. That if any creditor of any trader, within the meaning of this or any other statute relating to bankrupts now or hereafter to be in force, shall file an affidavit in the court authorized as hereinafter provided to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the district (to be described as hereinafter mentioned) in which such debtor shall reside, or in the Court of Bankruptcy if such debtor shall not reside in any such district, in the form specified in schedule hereunto annexed, (A. No. 1), of the truth of his debt, and of the debtor, as he verily believes, being such a trader as aforesaid, and of the delivery to such trader, personally, of an account in writing of the particulars of his demand, with a notice thereunder requiring immediate payment thereof, in the form specified in the said schedule, (A. No. 2), it shall be lawful for the court in which such affidavit shall be filed, as the case may be, to issue a summons in writing, in the form specified in the said schedule, (A. No. 3), calling upon such trader to appear before such court, and stating in such summons the purpose for which such trader is called upon by such summons to appear as hereinafter provided.

12. That upon the appearance of any such trader so summoned as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for such court to require such trader to state whether or not he admits the demand of such creditor so sworn to as aforesaid, or any and what part thereof, and if such trader shall admit such demand or any part thereof, to reduce such admission into writing, in the form specified in the schedule hereunto annexed, (B. No. 1), and such admission so reduced into writing such trader is hereby required to sign, and the same is thereupon to be filed in such court; and it shall also be lawful for such court to allow such trader upon his said appearance to make a deposition upon oath, in writing under his hand, to be filed in such court, in the form specified in the said schedule, (B. No. 2), that he verily believes he has a good defence to the said demand, or to some and what part thereof.

13. That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall not come before such court at the time appointed (having no lawful impediment made known to and proved to the satisfaction of the court at the said time, and allowed); or if any such trader, upon his appearance to such summons as aforesaid, shall refuse to admit such demand, and shall not make a deposition, in the form herein-before mentioned, that he believes he has a good defence to such demand, then and in either of the said cases, if such trader shall not within twenty-one days after personal service of such summons pay, secure, or compound for such demand to the satisfaction of such creditor, or enter into a bond, in such sum and with two sufficient sureties as such court shall approve of, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for the recovering of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in such action, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the twenty-second day after service of such summons, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit.

14. That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall, upon his appearance before such court, refuse to sign the admission in that behalf required as aforesaid, whatever may be the nature of his statement, or whether he makes any statement or not, it shall be deemed, for the purposes of this act, that every such trader thereby refuses to admit such demand: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for such court, upon reasonable cause shewn, to enlarge the time for calling upon such trader to state whether or not he admits such demand, or any part thereof, for such time as such court shall think fit.

15. That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid upon his said appearance shall sign an admission of such demand in the form aforesaid, and shall not, within twenty-one days next after the filing of such admission, pay, or tender and offer to pay, to such creditor the amount of such demand, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the twenty-second day after the filing of such admission, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit.

16. That if any such trader so summoned as aforesaid shall upon his said appearance sign an admission for part only of such demand in the form aforesaid, and shall not make a deposition, in the form herein-before required, that he believes he has a good defence to the residue of such demand, then and in such case, if such trader, as to the sum so admitted, shall not, within twenty-one days next after the filing of such admission, pay, or tender and offer to pay, to such creditor the sum so admitted, or secure or compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor, and, as to the residue of such demand, shall not, within twenty-one days after personal service of such summons, pay, secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such creditor, or enter into a bond, in such sum and with two sufficient sureties as such court shall approve of, to pay such sum as shall be recovered in any action which shall have been brought or shall thereafter be brought for the recovery of the same, together with such costs as shall be given in such action, every such trader shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the twenty-second day after service of such summons, provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two months from the filing of such affidavit.

17. Admission of debt signed elsewhere than in court, if attested by attorney of the trader in the form required, may be filed, and have the same force as an admission signed by a trader on his appearance in court under the summons.

18. Trader summoned on affidavit of debt to have such costs as the court shall think fit.

19. That in every action brought after the commencement of this act, wherein any such creditor is plaintiff and any such trader is defendant, and wherein the plaintiff shall not recover the amount of the sum for which he shall have filed an affidavit of debt under the provisions of this act, such defendant shall be entitled to costs of suit, to be taxed according to the custom of the court in which such action shall have been brought, provided that it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of the court in which such action is brought, upon motion to be made in court for that purpose, and upon hearing the parties by affidavit, that the plaintiff in such action had not any reasonable or probable cause for making such affidavit of debt to such amount as aforesaid, and provided such court shall thereupon, by a rule or order of the same court, direct that such costs shall be allowed to the defendant; and the plaintiff shall, upon such rule or order being made as aforesaid, be disabled from taking out any execution for the sum recovered in any such action unless the same shall exceed, and then in such sum only as the same shall exceed, the amount of the taxed costs of the defendant in such action; and in case the sum recovered in any such action shall be less than the amount of the costs of the defendant to be taxed as aforesaid, that then the defendant shall be entitled, after deducting the sum of money recovered by the plaintiff in such action from the amount of his costs so to be taxed as aforesaid, to take out execution for such costs in like manner as a defendant may now by law have execution for costs in other cases.

30. That if any plaintiff shall recover judgment in any action personal in any of her Majesty's courts of record against any such trader, and shall be in a situation to sue out execution upon such judgment, and there be nothing due from such plaintiff by way of set-off against such judgment, and such trader shall not, within twenty-one days after notice in writing personally served upon him requiring immediate payment of such judgment debt, pay, secure, or compound for the same to the satisfaction of such plaintiff, he shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the twenty-second day after service of such notice: Provided always, that if such execution shall in the meantime be suspended or restrained by any rule, order, or proceeding of any court of justice having jurisdiction in that behalf, no further proceeding shall be had on such notice, but that it shall be lawful nevertheless for such plaintiff, when he shall again be in a situation to sue out execution on such judgment, to proceed again by notice in manner before directed.

21. Trader disobeying order of any court of equity, or order in bankruptcy or lunacy, for payment of money, after service of order for payment on a peremptory day fixed, an act of bankruptcy; after personal notice of such order twenty-one days before the day fixed therein for payment, shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on the twenty-second day after the service of such order.

22. That if any such trader shall file in the office of the Lord Chancellor's Secretary of Bankrupts a declaration in writing (in the form of Schedule (D.) herewith annexed), signed by such trader, and attested by an attorney or solicitor, that he is unable to meet his engagements, every such trader shall be deemed thereby to have committed an act of bankruptcy at the time of filing such declaration: Provided a fiat in bankruptcy shall issue against such trader within two months from the filing of such declaration; and a copy of such declaration, purporting to be certified by the said secretary or his clerk as a true copy, shall be received as evidence of such declaration having been filed.

23. That before notice of any adjudication of bankruptcy shall be given in the London Gazette, and at or before the time of putting in execution any warrant of seizure which shall have been granted upon such adjudication, a duplicate of such adjudication shall be served on the person so adjudged bankrupt personally, or by leaving the same at the usual place of abode of such person, and that such person shall be allowed five days from the service of such duplicate to shew cause to the court authorized to act in the prosecution of the fiat under which such adjudication shall have been made, against the validity of such adjudication; and that, if such person shall within the time hereby allowed in that behalf shew to the satisfaction of such court that the petitioning creditor's debt, trading, and act of bankruptcy upon which such adjudication shall have been grounded, or that any or either of such matters are insufficient to support such adjudication, such court shall thereupon cause a memorandum in writing to be filed with the proceedings under such fiat, that such adjudication is annulled, and the same shall thereby be annulled accordingly; but if at the expiration of the said time no cause shall have been shewn to the satisfaction of such court for the annulling of such adjudication, such

LONDON, APRIL 2, 1842.

A recommendation is made in the concluding passage of a pamphlet, noticed in another part of this journal, which deserves, in the present juncture of public affairs, the serious attention of a personage bearing a judicial title, though denuded, except as a fiction of the law, of judicial functions; we mean the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. Miller proposes, that the Legislature should provide for the complete efficacy of equitable mortgages by deposit of title deeds; but he proposes at the same time, that they should be deprived of that which we believe constitutes their principal charm, the freedom from stamp duty. That this proposition might be acceptable in the eye of the functionary to whom we have alluded, is highly probable; but, whether it would find favor with the bankers and merchants and traders, who most deal with equitable mortgages, is quite another question; and whether, in the result, such a measure would be the cradle of a growing revenue, or the grave of equitable mortgages, is, also, a fitting question for curious speculation. That money to an enormous extent is constantly outstanding on the security of a mere deposit of deeds, is, we believe, not to be contested. And that, in the state in which the law was supposed to be before the dictum in Whitworth v. Gaugain, it was an extremely convenient and popular mode of giving and taking security, is not less incontestable; that is, while it was supposed that a deposit of deeds was a good security; and while it required neither the trouble of investigating a title, nor the expense of any kind of stamped instrument, it was thought much of by the trading community.

Abstractedly, however, we do not see what is the particular advantage of that mode of security. If the object of those whose commercial dealings lead them to effect the use of equitable mortgages, had been merely the rapidity with which they can be given for the purpose of raising and securing money, it is quite plain, that it would have been always needless for a lender to remain exposed to the legal inconveniences attaching on a mere equitable mortgage. Nothing could have been easier and simpler than for the borrower to execute a short legal conveyance, which, though inferior, in regard to its want of formality, to a properly drawn conveyance, would have been, at least, as good as a deposit for all the purposes for which a deposit was good; and would have been better, in so far as it was a legal transfer.

Blank forms for such short deeds, containing merely words of conveyance and a covenant for title, might have been prepared under advice, and kept by bankers and other traders in the habit of requiring suddenly to raise money; and, so far as mere rapidity is concerned, a legal mortgage might have been created with as much rapidity as an equitable one. The observation of a learned and eminent Judge, "that it may frequently be necessary to raise money on a sudden before an opportunity can be afforded of investigating the title-deeds and preparing the mortgage," (Keys v. Williams, 3 You. & C. 55), has, we submit, no special applicability to mortgages by deposit, and would be met as well by a short legal conveyance, such as we have alluded to, as by an equitable deposit; for it is not the form of the conveyance or transfer of the interest in the estate, that renders the investigation of title requisite; that investigation has, in general, nothing to do with the question how the estate is to be transferred, but only with the question what is the estate, or whether there is any estate that can be transferred. Sudden advances on deposits of deeds can obviously be only obtained where the lender trusts the borrower, and has some knowledge of the fact, that he has an estate such as is purported to be represented by the deed brought to him. Why, then, should his confidence be diminished because the borrower, instead of merely bringing the deeds and saying, "these are the title-deeds of my estate at A.," brings also a short conveyance ready drawn or printed, and executes it? The title would not, in either case, be examined; and every ground of objection on that score is as applicable to the one case as to the other. There is something, it is true, in the secrecy of equitable mortgages which has a real or supposed advantage to traders; but this, it is obvious, cannot co-exist with any efficient provision for making deposits a quasi legal security, inasmuch as such provisions cannot be effected without some mode of preserving a record of the mortgage transaction.

We are forced then to come back to the conclusion, that the only substantial ground on which a preference for equitable mortgages can be sustained, is the absence of stamp duty; and, if we recollect, that, for sums from 50*l.* to 500*l.*, the average stamp duty is 1*l.* 6*s.* per cent; and that, for sums from 500*l.* to 20,000*l.*, the average stamp duty is 18*s.* per cent., it will not seem wonderful that there should be a preference for a mode of security of such superior economy.

The question, however, as to rendering equitable mortgages efficient by legislative enactment, as against all subsequent incumbrances, legal or otherwise, appears to us, not so much whether equitable mortgages shall, by being so protected, continue to be resorted to as they now are; but which of the two modes of security, equitable or legal incumbrances, shall be forced out of general use. For if equitable mortgages are endowed with all the security of legal mortgages, and continue unchargeable with stamp duty, it is plain that they will, to a very great extent, if not wholly, supersede legal mortgages and other legal incumbrances. If, on the other hand, they are endowed with such security, and made liable to the ad valorem duty, then, we apprehend, that the principal grounds of their popularity, viz. their secrecy and economy, being withdrawn, they will not be much resorted to.

That it is desirable, however, that something should be done, in the way of settling the Law on this subject, cannot be doubted; for, at present, it seems conceded, first, that an equitable mortgage by deposit is clearly not good against a subsequent conveyance of the legal estate; and, secondly, that it is doubtful whether it is good against a subsequent judgment creditor proceeding under his judgment. The result is, that it is difficult to say when an equitable mortgage is worth anything at all as a security, except in the single excepted case of there being no subsequent dealing at all with the mortgaged property. This is clearly a state of the Law which must, if preserved, altogether drive equitable mortgages out of use.

We have received several communications on the subject of the annual duty paid by solicitors for the certificate necessary to authorize them to practise. The imposition of this duty has always been felt by the profession as a grievance. To those who are at the head of their profession, it must be admitted, the grievance is merely imaginary; but the number of these is very small; and not only to the young practitioner, but to the great body of practitioners, whether young or old, it has been and is a practically and heavily felt tax. We know that the laity have extraordinarily exaggerated notions of the gains of lawyers. To them a lawyer is now what a nabob was a century ago; they think him a being who finds gold grow under his feet; and they make their sons lawyers with an idea, that, being lawyers, they must become rich men. Of the fallacy of these lay dreams, the profession are but too well aware. It has been asserted, and we believe the assertion to be very near the truth, that the average gains of country solicitors do not exceed 200*l.* a year; and those of London practitioners are not much higher. It is well known, indeed, that now, few young men commencing practice, can hope to exist for the first four or five years of their career, by their professional labors. If they have not independent means of support, they are soon squeezed out of the crowd; and the number of attorneys weekly increasing the length of the insolvent list, is a melancholy proof of the fact. It is not necessary for us at present to enter into the remote and proximate causes of this state of things. We merely assert that it exists; and we are satisfied that the profession will almost unanimously bear witness to the truth of the assertion. Such, then, being the fact as regards the state of the profession, it becomes a matter of serious consideration, when they are called upon to bear, with the rest of their fellow citizens, such additional direct imposts as the wisdom of Parliament may think fit to lay on the community at large, whether the time has not arrived when they ought to unite in raising the question, whether there is any special reason why they should not only so bear their share of the general taxation, but continue, at the same time, to be subjected to a special impost, amounting of itself, as regards by far the greater number of practising solicitors, to a direct income tax, ranging between 3*l.* and 4*l.* per cent. We are informed, that steps are being taken to bring this question before the legislature. We trust that such is the fact; and that the men in great business, those who, not practically feeling the certificate tax, cannot have their motives misconstrued, will take the lead in endeavouring to obtain for their less fortunate brethren, a remission which is necessary, in order to put solicitors on an equality in point of burthens with men in other professions.

The fiction, that the imposition of a special burthen of this kind has any thing to do with the respectability of the practitioner, is, of course, in the present day, absurd. The respectability of the body of solicitors depends on far other considerations than the payment of some 8*l.* or 12*l.* per annum. It depends on the greater attention which is paid to the education of young men destined for the profession, and the greater estimation in society in which those who honorably fulfil their responsible duties are held. The certificate duty, whatever it may have been, is now, and has for many years, been a fiscal duty, and nothing more. And the whole question is, therefore, whether there is any good reason why a solicitor should pay 6*l.* or 7*l.* per cent. on his income, towards the public burthens, when men in every other profession and trade pay but 3*l.*; or, to speak with the accuracy of a premier, 2.917*l.*

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The following gentlemen have been appointed Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Sayers Turner, of Colchester, Essex; James Pearce, of Southmilton, Devonshire; John Pearce, of Hatherleigh, Devonshire; Frederic Willis, of Leighton Buzzard, Bedfordshire; John Cunningham, jun., of Braintree, Essex.

CORRECT MODE OF DESCRIBING A STATUTE.

Before the stat. 33 Geo. 3, c. 13, an act of parliament (in the absence of any special direction to the contrary) was considered to have passed, and its operation to have commenced, on the first day of the session. Since that statute, the commencement of the act (except where another period of commencement is therein provided) dates from the day on which it received the royal assent; and that day is directed to be indorsed on every act immediately after the title, and to be considered as part of the act.

This alteration in the law occasioned a corresponding change in the correct mode of describing or reciting a statute. A statute, passed previously to the act of Geo. 3, may be correctly described as of the year in which the session began, though the session extended into another year of the reign, and the statute was, in fact, passed in this subsequent year; and it is, in the latter case, incorrect to describe it as of the year in which it actually passed. For instance, the statutes passed in the first session of parliament in the reign of James I, are written in the statute book under the year secundo (vulgo primo). It appears that the parliament was begun and holden on the 19th March, in the first year of the King's reign; that was, within a few days of the end of the first year, Queen Elizabeth having died on the 24th March preceding; and it also appears, that it was continued until the 7th July, 1604, and then prorogued until the 7th February following; both which latter dates were clearly in the second year; and it was, therefore, objected, that the statute ought to have been described as of the second year. But it was contended, at the bar, by Mr. Abbott, and the court adopted his argument in their judgment, that, as it appeared that the parliament was begun in the first year of the King, and as there was nothing to denote the precise day on which the statute passed, whether before or after the adjournment or prorogation, the rule of law must apply, that all enactments relate to the first day of holding the parliament; and, therefore, the statute was properly described as of the first year. (Bryant v. Wühers, 2 M. & S. 123).

In the same way, it has been held, (Rumsey v. Tuffnell, 9 Moo. 425; 2 Bing. 255), that the statutes printed in the statute book as of the 29 Eliz., ought to be pleaded as of the 28th year of her reign; for there was no parliament roll for the former year; and although the parliament was adjourned, still it had relation back to the first day of the session, which, in this instance, commenced on the 29th October, in the 28 Eliz.

On the other hand, statutes passed since the act of Geo. 3, being referred to the date of the royal assent as the period of their commencement, may be correctly described as of the year when they received the royal assent, though the session in which they passed extended from that year into another; and if the royal assent was given in the latter of the two years, it would be inaccurate to describe them as of the former year alone. Thus, the Copyhold Commutation Act, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, appears to be improperly described in some of the forms that it provides, as an act passed in the fourth year of the reign; the royal assent having been given to it on the 21st January, 1841, the second day of the fifth year. On the other hand, the act relating to the qualification of members of parliament (1 & 2 Vict. c. 48; royal assent July 27, 1838) is correctly mentioned, in the form of declaration therein prescribed, as an act passed in the second year of the reign.

And in either case, whether the statute was passed before or since the act of Geo. 3, it is, in pleading, fatal, and in any kind of document inaccurate, to describe a statute as passed in two years of a reign, though the session of parliament in which it was passed extended from the one year into the other.

Thus, "it hath been adjudged," says Hawkins, "that, in an indictment, a repugnancy in setting forth the time when a parliament was holden, is fatal; as, if a statute be recited as made on such a day in the first and second years of such a king, for, it is impossible, that one and the same day should be in two years." (Langley v. Haynes, Moore, 302; Hawk. P. C., b. 2, c. 25, s. 104). Again, in Nutt v. Stedman, (Fort. 372), it was held, that a statute ought not to be pleaded as made in the 8th and 9th years of the reign of Will. 3, but that it ought to be pleaded of the 8th year, when the session began; for, in law, an act cannot be made in two years, and though so mentioned in the statute book, it cannot be good. So, likewise, in a case since the act of Geo. 3, (R. v. Biers, 1 Adol. & Ell. 377; 3 Nev. & M. 475), it was objected, that the indictment was bad, inasmuch as it alleged, that the defendants, well knowing that the prosecutors were liable to such penalties as should be incurred by the driver of their carriage, under an act passed "in the second and third years of the reign of his present Majesty," conspired, &c. The form of conviction, given in a schedule to the act in question, (printed as 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 120), speaks of it as an act "passed in the third year," &c. But an act of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 48, for amending the act in question, recites it, in the preamble, as an act, "passed in the second and third years of the reign of his present Majesty;" and that, it was contended, was a sufficient warrant for the mode of description used in the indictment. The court, however, held, that the objection to the indictment was good, on the authority of Langley v. Haynes, followed up by the decision in Nutt v. Stedman. And in a very recent case, where the declaration described the act for abolishing arrest on mesne process in civil actions, as "an act made and passed in the first and second years of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled, &c.," it was held, that this description of the statute was incorrect, and constituted a variance that was fatal, (Gibbs v. Pike, 8 Mee. & W. 223), "it being clearly inaccurate," said Mr. Baron Parke, "to state the statute to have passed in two years, because all acts take effect from the time of receiving the royal assent, unless otherwise provided for."

But, in all cases where the session extended from one year into another, whether the statute was passed before or after the act of Geo. 3, and whether it was passed in the first or the second of the two years, the most safe and accurate method, and that prescribed by the court in the cases both of R. v. Biers and Gibbs v. Pike, is, to describe it as "passed in the session of parliament held" in those years; for this, it is evident, will prevent the possibility of any exception being taken to the correctness of the statement, or of any confusion with the acts of another session. This mode of statement is followed in the act for the further amendment of the law, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, (an act, whose authorship is attributed to one of the most distinguished ornaments of the bench), which, in s. 16, refers to "the statute passed in the session of parliament held in the eighth and ninth years of the reign of King William the Third, intituled, &c."

There is, however, a peculiar exception to these rules, deserving of notice, that came under consideration in the case of Rann v. Green, (Cowp. 474). The declaration described a statute on which the action was brought to be a statute of the 4th of Philip & Mary, whereas, the record, when produced in evidence, appeared to be of the 4th & 5th of Philip & Mary. It was contended, that the former was the true description of the statute; it being made in the fourth year of their joint reign. Lord Mansfield said: "It is impossible to get over this objection. The only question is, whether this is a variance in the description of the material ground of action? In some reigns, as in Car. 2 and Geo. 2, it happens, that the parliament meets in one year of the reign, and continues during part of the next year. In that case, the method is to intitle the acts passed of both years. But, in point of law, acts of parliament, which do not, in words, confine the commencement to a particular day, or where the commencement does not appear from the subject-matter, refer to the first day of the session; and, therefore, supposing this to be an act of the 4th & 5th of Philip & Mary, according to such method, it would, in truth, be a statute of the 4th, and ought to be so set forth. But, in this case, it is different. Philip, by act of parliament, has the stile of King. But his being so intitled does not annihilate the first year of the reign of Queen Mary. Therefore, from that time, the statutes are intitled the 1st & 2nd, the 2nd & 3rd of Philip & Mary, and so on; that is, the 1st of Philip and 2nd of Mary, &c. Here the declaration describes the statute to be of the fourth of Philip & Mary. Upon the parliament roll being produced, it appears to be an act passed in the 4th & 5th of Philip & Mary. The statute, therefore, described in the declaration, is different from the statute produced; and, in fact, there is no act in the statute book of the 4th of Philip & Mary."

The decisions we have been considering have all taken place on matters of pleading; and though there may not be the same motives for exacting the observance of this scrupulous correctness in other documents, for example, in those that occupy the attention of the conveyancing draftsman, as the same fatal consequences are not risked; yet, even there, the nicest accuracy and propriety of verbal details might be advantageously studied, by following the method of describing a statute recommended in R. v. Biers, wherever it may be consistent with the desirable perspicuity and terseness of expression. In the conveyance by release, indeed, the inconvenience of lengthening the parenthetical mention of the statute 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21, interposed between the nominative and the verb in the operative part of the deed, would seem to present a sufficient reason for adhering to the usual form of referring to it as "An Act passed in the fourth year of the reign of her present Majesty, &c.:" since, as we have seen, that mode of stating it, (the act having received the royal assent on the 18th May, 1841), seems to be fully warranted, even on the strict principles of pleading, by the authorities to which we have called our readers' attention.

In the case, however, of statutes which received the royal assent in the latter of two years in which the session was holden, convenience requires that they should be described as of both years, in order to distinguish them from statutes in a subsequent session commencing or held in the same year; and, consequently, that the method should be adopted of stating them as statutes "passed in the session of parliament, held in the th and th years of the reign, &c."

The plan of describing the statutes passed in the first of the two years in which the session was held, as statutes of that first year alone, and those passed in the second year, as statutes of both years, has also this advantage—that it agrees with the mode adopted by the Queen's printer in the copies printed by him. And this authority has been referred to, as at least presumptive evidence of the authentic text of the title of a modern statute in the case of Rex v. Barnett, (3 Camp. 345), where the title of a statute, (one in the 5th year of Elizabeth), in the copy of the act lately printed by the King's printer, being different to that in Ruffhead's edition of the statutes, Lord Ellenborough said, that, in the case of a recent statute, he should have acted upon the copy printed by the King's printer; but, with regard to a statute of Queen Elizabeth, he should consider Ruffhead to be correct, till the contrary was proved by an examination of the parliament roll.

In concluding these remarks upon the mode of describing statutes in legal documents, we may notice two practices that prevail in the manner of citing statutes; matters, indeed, of minor importance, but not wholly unconnected with our subject. When a session of parliament has extended from one reign into another, it is very common to cite a statute of frequent reference, as a statute of the first year of the new reign only. Thus it is, we believe, an almost universal practice to cite the new Will Act as the 1 Vict. c. 26. And this is the mode adopted by the Queen's printer in the heading to his copies. On the other hand, statutes passed in the first of two years in which the session was held are frequently cited as statutes of both years; this being the general description prefixed to the collective edition of the statutes of the whole session. But these modes of citation are by no means uniformly observed, even in the pages of the same legal author. B.

An Essay on Equitable Mortgages by Deposit of Deeds, with Remarks, &c. By SAMUEL MILLER, Esq., Barrister. [Butterworth.]

We had anticipated, on opening this pamphlet, that we should find a minute inquiry into the doctrine supposed to flow from the dictum of Lord Cottenham, in Whitworth v. Gaugain, (see ante, vol. 5, p. 523, and p. 509), a doctrine obviously of the highest importance; since, if the rule be according to the dictum in that case, that a subsequent judgment creditor, without notice, having sued out an elegit, will not be restrained by injunction from proceeding under such elegit at the suit of a prior mortgagee by deposit, it is plain, that an equitable mortgage by deposit is, taking into consideration its other disadvantages, a nearly worthless security. Mr. Miller has not, however, treated this question at any length; his object appears to have been rather to set forth a concise exposé of the law on equitable mortgages by deposit, as it stood before Whitworth v. Gaugain; and then, stating the case of Whitworth v. Gaugain; the doubt created by it; and the importance in regard to commerce of the practice of mortgaging by deposit of deeds,—to point out, that the law is in such a state as to render the interposition of the Legislature requisite for the purpose of making that practice safe and convenient. The learned author's statement of the law of mortgages by deposit contains nothing of novelty; indeed, such an essay could scarcely at the present day, be original, without becoming incorrect. It is, however, clear and concise, and may be read with advantage, as a neat resumé of the cases. With the meagreness of the portion devoted to the examination of Whitworth v. Gaugain, we confess ourselves disappointed; the dictum of Lord Chancellor Cottenham, being merely such, is clearly open to discussion; and we think the author would have deserved better of the profession if he had learnedly and laboriously opened the law on this doubt, instead of leaving it, as he found it, a mere doubt.

We conclude with quoting his propositions for legislative interference, which seem deserving of consideration:—

"The enactments (says Mr. Miller, p. 84) necessary for this purpose will, it is conceived, be very simple, being almost confined to a declaration, that, for the future, no equitable mortgage by deposit of deeds should be deemed valid, unless a memorandum in writing be signed by the mortgagor, expressing the purpose for which the deposit is made, and the extent of the security; but, that every equitable mortgage, with such a memorandum, should be good against all subsequent incumbrances, whether legal or otherwise. It may, perhaps, be desirable to determine, by enactment, how far the deposit of a portion only of the title deeds shall be deemed sufficient; and to carry out the suggestion of Lord Eldon, in the case of Evans v. Dick-

'sell, (6 Ves. 190), by making an exception in favour of joint tenants, tenants in common, and other persons, who cannot possess themselves of the title deeds of the estate in which they may be interested; but these will be mere matters of detail.

"One other provision, however, it is submitted, will be indispensable, and cannot be objected to by the holders of equitable mortgages, for the great boon they will obtain in having their securities rendered indisputable; and that is, to render the memorandum of deposit liable to the same stamp as is now imposed upon a legal mortgage; but, as many cases may occur, where equitable mortgages may be created for the sole purposes of commerce, and to exist for very short periods, the same regulations, it is submitted, should be made, with regard to stamping these memoranda, as are in force in relation to agreements, viz. that it should not be compulsory upon the holders to stamp them immediately, but that no equitable mortgage should be put in force, or be receivable in evidence, without the memorandum of deposit being stamped; and that, if not stamped within twenty-one days after its being signed, the stamp should only then be affixed on payment of a certain penalty.

"With the simple provisions above suggested, it is humbly conceived, the objections against equitable mortgages, so long urged on judicial authority, would be effectually removed, while merchants and capitalists would obtain all the advantages to be derived from them; and a considerable benefit would accrue to the revenue."

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

It appears, that the mode of printing adopted in the current volume of THE JURIST is not understood by all of our correspondents—so the blunder it will present no difficulty; but as they have repeat the statement contained in our first volume: that the Miscellaneous Matter and the Reports are intended to form distinct volumes, and are separately bound, and so made up, that, after cutting open the number, the ten or twelve (as the case may be) inner leaves of Reports may be removed from the enveloping leaves of Miscellaneous Matter.

At the request of several Subscribers, we shall give at the end of each quarter a Table of the Names of the Cases published during that period.

LONDON, APRIL 9, 1842.

It does not often fall within the province of the practicing lawyer to have any concern with the proceedings of Courts Martial, or to conduct matters depending on the construction of the Mutiny Act, and the Articles of War. Accordingly, we believe, that there is no act to be found in the statute book which is so invariably passed over unnoticed as the Mutiny Act; and no Courts, whose constitution, powers, and proceedings, are so little known to the profession as those of Courts Martial. We remember a striking instance of this while Lord Brougham presided in the Court of Chancery. An application was made to his Lordship, on the part of a person who had been tried and sentenced to a certain punishment by a Court Martial, to alter the sentence of the Court Martial, and to restrain the continuance of the punishment awarded. But the Lord Chancellor answered, that the Court Martial, having adjudicated, was at an end; irrevocably defunct, and gone; and asked, whether he had jurisdiction to order the Crown to constitute a fresh Court Martial to reconsider the sentence of the former one, observing that, if, as he conceived, he had not, there was no person in existence to whom he could address his order.

Now, but for the great inattention with which the Mutiny Act, and the Articles of War, are habitually treated by lawyers, such an application could never have been thought of. The Mutiny Act gives power to the Crown to call Courts Martial into existence, and limits the powers with which such Courts may be invested; but does not, of itself, create any such Courts. A Court Martial is a Court created pro hac vice, by virtue of the authority of the Crown, in pursuance of the powers given to it by the Mutiny Act. It is called into existence for the trial of some particular case; and having tried and adjudicated on the matter brought before it, its existence terminates of itself, and it has no continuance, either of authority or of liability*. The sentence of the Court is, in effect, the sentence of the Crown, because, by the Articles of War creating the Court, its sentence cannot be carried into effect until it has been confirmed by the Crown, or by the officer to whom the Crown has delegated its power of confirming or annulling it. It is clear, therefore, that the Chancellor can have no authority or power to interfere, after sentence, against the decision of a Court Martial. Upon the Court itself he cannot act, because it has wholly ceased to exist. And, as regards the sentence, whether it be just or unjust, it is the sentence of the Crown, passed in conformity with powers vested in it by the Legislature, and cannot be reconsidered, except by the Crown, or some body to whom it shall delegate its authority*. The Crown may, indeed, by virtue of a clause in the Mutiny Act, remit the sentence of a Court Martial to it once for revision†; but, strictly speaking, it does not seem possible for the Crown itself, judicially, to reconsider the sentence of a Court Martial, though, undoubtedly, it may, in the exercise of its prerogative, remit, with or without further inquiry, any part of the sentence. "The King," says a writer of reputation on this subject, (Abye on Courts Martial, p. 36), "can no more add to or alter the sentence of a Court Martial, than he can a judgment given in the Courts of Law."

* This is strikingly exemplified by the case of Lieut. Fry. (See Palmer's Pract. of the Privy Council, 1831, p. 3, and 1834, p. 39). In that case, Lieut. Fry, having been tried by a Court Martial, and having had sentence passed upon him, used, after the sentence pronounced, language grossly insulting to the members of the Court, who thereupon condemned, or assumed to condemn him, in punishment of his further offence, to severe imprisonment. But, on an action brought by Lieut. Fry against the President of the Court Martial, he recovered a verdict for heavy damages, the further sentence of the Court Martial, after it had pronounced its original sentence on the matter before it, being held altogether without authority, and illegal.

The general effect of the Mutiny Act, so far as it is a penal act, is to declare, that certain acts, which, in a civil law, would not be crimes at all, or would only be crimes of a slight degree of culpability, shall be held, if committed by a person commissioned, or being in pay as an officer, or by a person listed or in pay as a soldier in the Queen's forces, crimes drawing after them liability to stated punishments; and, further, to give power to the Crown to make articles of war, or rules for governing the army, conformable to the terms of the Mutiny Act; and to constitute the particular tribunals, called Courts Martial, for trying, in a summary way, the fact, whether such offences have been committed; and for awarding and inflicting punishments within certain limits defined by the act.

The Act divides Courts Martial into three kinds: the General Court Martial; the Garrison, or District Court Martial; and the Regimental Court Martial. The first must consist of not less than thirteen commissioned officers, if in any part of the Queen's dominions, except Bermuda, the Bahamas, and certain other places, or if in India; or not less than seven, if in Bermuda, the Bahamas, or out of the Queen's dominions; and of not less than five, if in St. Helena, Africa, or the Australian Colonies; and it is directed, somewhat inaccurately, that judgment of death shall not be passed by any such court martial, without the concurrence of two-thirds, at the least, of the officers present; a direction, which, in effect, amounts to saying, that unless the court is constituted of more than the required number of members, judgment of death shall require a majority of more than two-thirds; since, upon the numbers thirteen, seven, and five, a majority of two-thirds exactly can have no existence. A general Court Martial may, by the Mutiny Act, have power to award as a punishment imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, as to a given portion of such imprisonment; and it may also inflict corporal punishment, not extending to life or limb. It may also deprive the party adjudged guilty of such right to additional pay or pension, as he would have been, in the absence of such adjudication entitled to; or it may, instead of awarding death, for a crime made by the act punishable with death, sentence the offender to be transported as a felon, for life, or for a term of years.

The District, or Garrison Court Martial, is the next in extent of jurisdiction. It must consist of seven commissioned officers, except in certain specified Colonies, where it may consist of five; and it may sentence to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement; or to corporal punishment not extending to life or limb; and also to forfeiture of advantage as to additional pay.

The Regimental Court Martial is to be constituted in cases of mutiny and gross insubordination, or any offences committed on the line of march. The Mutiny Act does not specify the number of which a Regimental Court Martial must be composed; but, by the Articles of War, it is ordered, that it shall consist of not less than five officers, unless it be found impracticable to assemble that number, and then three may be sufficient.

With respect to the formation of General Courts Martial, and District or Garrison Courts Martial, the Articles of War keep strictly within the limits prescribed by the Mutiny Act. But, as regards the powers of Regimental Courts Martial, there is a discrepancy between the terms of the Act and of the Articles of War, which purport to be founded upon it. The 10th clause of the Mutiny Act specifically points out the powers of a Regimental Court Martial. It may sentence a soldier to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding forty days; of which a portion may be directed to be solitary confinement; and, for particular offences, it may deprive a soldier of a penny a day, for a period not exceeding thirty days; and may deprive him of certain allowances. But it makes no mention whatever of corporal punishment, or of stoppages of pay, other than the penny a day mentioned. By the Articles of War, however, it is ordered that a Regimental Court Martial may award imprisonment, following the terms of the Mutiny Act, and corporal punishment not exceeding 100 lashes, or other punishments according to the usage of the service; and further, that the court may sentence a soldier to be put under stoppages, not exceeding two-thirds of his daily pay, until any loss or damage done to his horse, arms, accoutrements, &c., by his misconduct, shall be made good.

New, however necessary it may be for the maintenance of discipline on the line of march, that the infliction of the only punishment in many cases capable of being applied, viz. corporal punishment, should be within the power of a Regimental Court Martial; and, however reasonable and just it may be, that, if a soldier has by misconduct injured the arms &c. which are intrusted to him to use carefully in the execution of his duty, he should be compelled at his own costs to repair the damage, we question very much the legality of the 79th Article of War, so far as it departs in these particulars from the Mutiny Act. The Act is the whole and sole foundation for the authority of the Courts called Courts Martial. The preamble recites, that the keeping a standing army, except with the consent of Parliament, is against law. It recites, as the reason of the Act, that no man can be forejudged of life and limb, or subjected in time of peace to any kind of punishment, except according to the known laws of the realm; and that it is requisite for retaining the forces in their duty, that they should be brought to a more exemplary and speedy punishment than the forms of law will allow; and the Act then proceeds to enact, that certain military offences shall be punishable in specific modes. In the 4th section, which gives power to the Queen to make Articles of War, it is provided, that no person shall, by those Articles, "be subject, with reference to any crimes made punishable by this Act, to be punished in any manner which shall not accord with the provisions of this Act."

It is clear, therefore, that the authority of the Crown to make Articles of War is given and limited by the Act; and the only question is, whether, on the construction of the Act, it intends that Regimental Courts Martial should have the powers in question. Having regard to the circumstance, that, in the clauses of the Act relating to General and District Courts Martial, corporal punishment is specifically mentioned; and that, in the 9th clause, relating to the powers of District Courts Martial, stoppages out of the soldier's pay to make good any damage done by his misconduct, are also specifically mentioned, we confess it appears to us, that the omission of powers to inflict either of these punishments, in the 10th clause, must be held intentional; and that the powers given in that respect, by the 79th Article of War, are not in conformity with the Mutiny Act; and this conclusion is strengthened as to any general power of making stoppages of pay, by the introduction in the 10th clause itself of a specific power to stop pay to a particular extent, viz. one penny per day.

How the legality of a sentence of corporal punishment, passed under the 79th Article of War, is to be tried, is a distinct question, perhaps not of easy solution. We apprehend it to be clear, that no ordinary Court of Justice has original jurisdiction to inquire into the matter. According to Lord Erskine's opinion, (referred to above), the proper course, it seems, would be to petition the Crown to refer it to the Judges for their opinion on the lawfulness of the sentence; and the case which he mentions would afford a precedent for that course. If the Judges returned an opinion against it, there can be little doubt that the Crown would annul such sentence. But if the Crown should refuse to refer the question to the Judges, or, having referred it, should refuse to act on their opinion, we know of no course which would be open to the aggrieved party, unless, perhaps, in the latter supposition, by articles of impeachment against the responsible adviser of the Crown, — a remedy which it would obviously be absurd to think of in practice, for a trifling stretch of authority.

The three kinds of Courts Martial above mentioned, appear to differ chiefly in their constitution and extent of jurisdiction. As regards their modes of proceeding, there appears to be no material difference. "It may be observed, (says a late writer on Courts Martial, after citing his remarks on the practice of General Courts Martial), that they equally apply to Courts Martial other than General Courts Martial, which ought to regulate their proceedings in every essential point exactly in the same manner as has been above detailed; the difference between them consisting merely in their constitution, and in several offences not being cognisable by the minor Courts." (Kennedy on Courts Martial, p. 240).

It would be foreign to our purpose, and lead us into too great length, were we to attempt to enter into the practice of these peculiar species of Courts; our object merely being to point out the general foundation of the law military, and the general constitution of the tribunals authorized by the Legislature to carry it into effect.

A Practical Treatise on the Law of Estates for Life.
By ANDREW BISSET, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. 8vo. pp. 385. [Stevens & Norton.]

Our only regret, after perusing this work, was, that its scope had not been extended so as to embrace estates of freehold generally, instead of being confined to estates for life. The profession is sufficiently supplied, in various shapes, with minute and recent information on the subject of estates for years, and other chattel interests—a branch of the law, which, in modern times, has grown into such luxuriance and extent, as quite to overshadow its elder and once more important co-scions; but there is no recent work in which the learning as to freehold estates is to be found arranged in an accessible form, and treated with sufficient minuteness and accuracy. So far as his plan extends, Mr. Bisset has supplied this want with great learning and ability. He is deeply read in the old reports and text books; and yet never obtrudes upon his reader any of their antiquated quaintnesses or obsolete conceits or distinctions, but uses such fossil judicial remains as his researches have brought to light, rather with a view to illustrate and interpret the modern revelations of the bench than to overthrow or shake our faith in them. Without attaining, as, indeed, he does not appear to have aimed at, the remarkable conciseness of Burton's work, our author has produced a treatise, which, like the "Compendium" of that lamented writer, is at once practical and profound; concise, but, at the same time, complete in its statement of the law, and accurate and critical in its exposition of its grounds. We hope that Mr. Bisset's labours will not stop here, but will be devoted to the elucidation of other divisions of the law of real property; some of which, since the recent legislative changes, afford more scope for original comment than the subject of the work before us, which, however, contains much that is of immediate practical interest, as will be perceived from a slight outline of its contents. After discussing the definition of estates for life and of freehold, and the division of estates for life into estates absolute and determinable, our author treats of the estate tail after possibility of issue extinct, and the privileges of the tenant in respect of waste. After fully treating of the other kinds of estates for life by operation of law, namely, estates by the curtesy and estates in dower, he proceeds to the consideration of estates created by express grant or limitation; of estates pour autre vie; of the forfeiture and alienation of estates for life; of the law of merger, as it affects estates for life (and herein of a matter of considerable practical importance, viz. the merger of charges); of the exercise of powers by tenant for life; of renewals of leaseholds; of the apportionment of rent and incumbrances; of estovers, emblements, and fixtures; and lastly, of waste.

The chapter on the Law of Merger as it affects Life Estates, though it displays considerable learning, is one of the least satisfactory parts of the book. The subject of the merger of one life estate in another is unaccountably passed over without any notice beyond a discussion of Mr. Preston's doctrine, that there may be merger of an estate in an equal estate—a discussion which ends in no definite result, and throws scarcely any light on the subject of the merger of life estates in each other. Mr. Preston's positions on this branch of the law of merger are, that an estate may merge in an estate in remainder or reversion that is not less than the particular estate; that an estate for the tenant's own life is greater than an estate pour autre vie; that all estates pour autre vie are equal; and that, therefore, one estate pour autre vie may merge in another estate pour autre vie, or in an estate for the tenant's own life; but that an estate for tenant's own life cannot merge in an estate pour autre vie. Mr. Bisset disputes Mr. Preston's assertion, that a particular estate may merge in an estate that is equal to, and not greater than, the particular estate; but he takes no notice at all of the other propositions stated above. The position, that an estate pour autre vie will merge in an estate for the tenant's own life, but not vice versa, on the ground that the latter estate is greater in quantity than the former, appears to be supported by the authorities. (19 Ed. 3. Surr. 8; 12 Hen. 7, 11; Perkins, 413; Godb. 51, Windham and Hulbert's case, argu., 11 Rep. 81, fourth Resolution, 2 Roll. Abr. 498 (R.), pl. 2; Co. Litt. 42. a.; Vin. Abr. Merger, F. O. 4). Thus, if a lease is made to A. for the life of B., without impeachment of waste, remainder to A. for his own life, he is punishable for waste, for the first estate is merged; (Godb. 52); but if the first lease be to A. for his own life, remainder to him for the life of B., it is otherwise. (Ib.). The soundness of the doctrine may well be questioned, for it involves the absurd assumption, that two life estates, which the law considers as equal when divided in ownership, become unequal the moment they are united in one person. A necessary consequence is, that, if A. be seised for the life of B., and B. in remainder for life of A., (a limitation which may be perfectly valid), upon the union of the two estates in A., he will be seised for his own life simply; but, upon the union of the two estates in B., he would be seised for his own life in possession, with remainder to himself for the life of A.

An estate in tail after possibility of issue extinct is considered to be, in quantity, no more than a life estate; and, in the third resolution in Bowles's case, (11 Rep. 153; Bowles v. Berrie, 1 Rol. 177, S. C.), where the limitation was to the use of T. and A., his wife, for their lives, sans waste, with remainder to the use of the first issue male, &c., with remainder to the use of the heirs male of T. and A., and T. died, leaving issue by A. which issue died, living A., it was said, that, because the wife has the estate for life by the limitation of the party, and the estate which she had in the remainder, &c., of the tenancy in tail after possibility, was not a larger estate in quantity, and therefore could not merge the estate for life, for this cause, the wife was not tenant in tail after possibility [in possession]; but, as it was also resolved, that she had the privilege of tenant in tail after possibility, on account of the inheritance that was once in her, the resolution upon the question of merger, amounted to nothing more than a dictum; and is, we believe, the only authority against Mr. Preston's position, that an estate may merge in an equal estate. The case of Williams v. Williams, (12 East, 206; 15 Ves. 419), is, as Mr. Bisset has shewn, no authority either way. There is a passage, however, in Co. Litt. 299. b., where it is said, that, if a man lease to A. during the life of B., the remainder to him during the life of C., if the lessee commit waste, an action shall lie against him; and as the case is put as an instance of a tenant's liability for waste, notwithstanding a remainder in himself, it is evident that Lord Coke thought there was no merger of the first estate. Upon these authorities, however, Mr. Bisset considers it to be established, against Mr. Preston's opinion, that there cannot be any merger as between equal estates of freehold. Now, when it is remembered, how completely this position is opposed by all analogy, and how many old authorities (of greater intrinsic weight than those cited by Mr. Bisset) on related points in the doctrine of merger can be produced, which have been repeatedly overruled, we think that Mr. Preston's opinion is entitled to more respect than is shewn it by so positive an assertion of a directly contrary conclusion. The analogy is distinctly the other way; for Mr. Preston has shewn, that one conditional fee may merge in another; (3 Prest. Conv. 258, et seq.; Benson's case, 9 Rep. 438; S. C. nom. Baker v. Willis, Cro. Car. 478); and it is settled, that one estate by statute or elegit may merge in another; (Dighton v. Grenville, 2 Vent. 281; Collis, P. C. 84); and that a term of years may merge in a reversion even for a shorter term of years; (Hughes v. Rowbotham, Cro. El. 302; Stephens v. Bridges, 6 Madd. 66); and there is obviously no reason why a different rule should apply to estates for life from that which governs estates of inheritance, or for years. As an instance of an old authority on the law of merger, now overruled, take Perry v. Allen, (Cro. El. 173; 1 Leon. 303; Owen, 97), where it was held, (contrary to what is now well settled law), that, when leases for twenty years maketh a lease for ten years, the second lease cannot surrender to the first lease, for ten years cannot be drowned in twenty; dicta to the same effect, and which are not law, are to be found in Shep. Touch. 341; Co. Litt. 273. Again, in Hurd v. Foy, (2 Roll. Rep. 485; 15 Vin. Abr. 316), it was agreed, that, in the case of a lease for life to A., remainder for life to B., and B. grants his estate to A., this is an extinguishment, and the first lease is immediate tenant to the lessor. Now, this conclusion is wrong, if it be law, that an estate for one's own life will not merge in an estate pour autre vie. Other instances are to be found among the old authorities on the merger of estates as between husband and wife. (See Co. Litt. 838. b.; Bracebridge v. Cook, Plowd. 418; Lechlan v. Wisnora, 1 Roll. Abr. Extinguishment, (A) 10; 2 Roll. Rep. 472; 3 T. R. 401; Thorn v. Newman, 3 Swanst. 603).

Mr. Bisset seems to be especially ambitious of correcting Mr. Preston; thus, in treating of the exceptions to the general rule respecting merger, in cases where one of the estates is held in autre droit, he has these remarks: "Mr. Preston puts the following case as one of great difficulty: a husband has a term for years in right of his wife, and the reversion in fee descends to his wife; 'in this case,' he says, 'it is difficult to anticipate the judgment of the courts of justice, and no case has occurred which decides the point.' The solution given above of the case of Purefoy v. Rogers, seems equally applicable here. Here, as in that case, both estates are held in the same right; therefore, why should not the general rule apply, and merger be the consequence?" Now, we do not see that this is at all clear; the exceptions in the law of merger are all intended to prevent injustice; the injustice which would happen if merger were allowed in cases of the acquisition of estates by act of law and in autre droit. Thus it is settled, that, if the husband is possessed of a term in his own right, and then the inheritance descends to his wife, there shall be no merger; because the descent was an act of law which the husband could not prevent; and, therefore, shall not turn to his prejudice. (Platt v. Heap, Cro. Jac. 275; Bulst. 118). Now, the term which the husband has in his marital right, and the freehold which he has in right of his wife, are not held precisely in the same right; for the term he may dispose of absolutely; and it is for all purposes, except his wife's right by survivorship in case he makes no disposition of it, his own property; but the freehold is not his own in the same sense; and, therefore, to hold the term to be merged in the case put by Mr. Preston, would occasion the very same inconvenience and injustice, that the court strove to avoid in the case of Platt v. Heap. Indeed, in that very case, as appears from Bulstrode's report, Croke, J., was evidently of opinion, that merger would not always take place, although both estates were held in the same right; for he inclined to think, that, if the husband had had issue by his wife after the inheritance descended to her, so as thereby to become entitled to be tenant by curtesy and have a freehold in his own right, the term would not merge, which he said was a much stronger case. If the term of the wife is considered to belong to the husband sufficiently to cause a merger as against him on his requiring the reversion by descent, although as against the wife surviving there is no merger, there seems to be some ground, at least, for contending that it belongs to him sufficiently to be protected in his favor from merger, when the wife acquires the reversion by descent, although the protection might not extend to benefit the wife.

Our author cites Mr. Burton's definition of an estate of freehold not of inheritance, as an estate limited to the duration of some person's life, or to some uncertain period included in such life, and not referred to the mere will of the next person in succession; and objects to it, that it is founded on a false assumption, that those uncertain periods which may, by the words of limitation, extend beyond the life of the grantee, will not cause the estate to be freehold; while those which must be confined within such life, will have that effect. But this objection is founded, we think, on a misunderstanding of Mr. Burton's words; which were not intended to imply, that the limitation must, in so many words, confine the duration of the estate within the period of a life; but that any limitation, which, whether by the force of its own terms, or by the effect of any rule of law, would not be effectual to convey an interest of greater duration than the term of a life, would, if in other respects it came within the definition, confer an estate of freehold. This construction at once lets in the case instanced by Mr. Bisset, of a limitation to A. till B. comes from St. James's; where, though by the mere words of the limitation the estate may possibly last for ever, yet, by a rule of law, it shall only be a life estate, for want of words of inheritance; and the case of a lease of a manor, worth 20*l.* per annum, to A. until 1007. be paid out of the profits; which obviously comes also within Mr. Burton's definition, inasmuch as it is not certain that the profits of the manor will continue the same. But, in his strictures to the latter part of the definition, Mr. Bisset is more successful; and we shall conclude by extracting them as a very fair specimen of our author's style. We quite agree with him in his opinion, that definitions, in legal matters at least, are very useless exercises of ingenuity.

"But this definition is open to other objections. The words are: 'limited to the duration of some person's life, or to some uncertain period included in such life, and not referred to the mere will of the next person in succession.' Cases might be pointed out falling within the letter of this definition, but contrary to its spirit and intention, as where the persons who have the substantial power of determining the estate have not the legal reversion in them. But waiving this, the latter words of the definition, viz. 'not referred to the mere will of the next person in succession,' are not only not in accordance with, but are contrary to the current of the authorities. In the majority of cases, indeed, cited by Lord Coke, and elsewhere, of determinable life estates, held to be freehold, the determination, in so far as it is stated to be dependant on human will, is to be at the will of the lessee or grantee. But, besides one or two cases mentioned by Lord Coke, several cases are to be found in the Year-Books, which shew, that a lease expressed to be determinable at the will of the lessor only, will, if livery of seisin be made, take effect as an estate for life determinable, and, therefore, as a freehold; while, in the absence of livery, or of that which is tantamount to livery, the lessee has only an estate at will, which, whether expressed to be at the will of the lessor or at that of the lessee, will be at the will of both parties. The same law, says Lord Coke, is of a declaration of a use; consequently, what under the Statute of Uses is equivalent to livery, or to that which is tantamount to livery, will have the force of livery in this instance. It is, therefore, evident, that Mr. Burton's definition of freehold, excludes several classes of estates which the sages of the English law have, for many centuries, held to be freehold.

"Upon the whole view of the cases, livery of seisin appears to have been the investitive fact—the primary fundamental element of a freehold; although, in the majority of the cases, the estate is not determinable at the mere will of the lessor, the fact of its being determinable at the will of the lessor only, has been held not to deprive it of the character of a freehold, provided there was livery of seisin, or, in the case of things lying in grant, delivery of the deed. So that, upon the whole, as regards the definition of a freehold, in the present state of the law on the subject, it does not seem safe to go beyond Mr. Justice Blackstone's description of a freehold, viz. that it is such an estate in lands as is conveyed by livery of seisin, or, in tenements of an incorporeal nature, by what is equivalent thereto.

"The fact is, that definition, difficult in all but the purely abstract sciences, is peculiarly so in a system of living law. To include in a general expression the whole of a number of particulars, which are not only imperfectly ascertained from their endless variety, caused by distinctions extremely minute, though often very important, but are constantly subjected to the process of being changed and added to, is evidently not merely a difficult but an impossible operation. Under such circumstances, as a definition, perfectly precise and comprehensive, is clearly unattainable, it seems a sufficient approximation to such a definition, to confine it to an explanation of what logicians call the differentia, by which we mean a property, or in other language, a certain cluster of particulars, implied in the name of the class intended to be defined. Littleton's definition of a tenant in tail after possibility, &c., is an example of this. It is not all-comprehensive; it includes only the cases implied in the name, omitting for example, all the cases of tenant for life, who has once been tenant in tail in possession. When the name to be defined does not furnish the means of doing this, there seems to be nothing to be attempted, but some description which will convey an idea accurate and clear, as far as it goes, of some of the properties included in the class in question." Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, April 5.

Sir V. Blake moved for and obtained leave to bring in a Bill relative to the Admission of Barristers in Ireland. At present, students at law, before they could be admitted to the Irish bar, must keep certain terms at one of the English Inns of Court. The object of the Bill was to transfer that residence to Ireland. The Bill was brought in and read a first time.

Wednesday, April 6.

The House having, on the motion of Lord Maitland, gone into committee on the Copyright Bill*, Lord Maitland urged the adoption of his amendments on the House. He replied to the arguments that had been used in a former Session respecting the probability of an author's descendants seeking to suppress a work valuable to the public; and endeavored to shew that, while the labour of the author was of a class which entitled him to protection in the produce of his labour, no injurious increase in the price of books would result to the public by extending, as his Bill proposed, the term of copyright.

Mr. Mackenzie proposed, as a superior plan, to give to an author a life interest in his work, and such a further term as should make the duration of the copyright, in all cases, forty-two years.

Mr. Waddy thought, that successful authors were, under the existing law, amply remunerated; and he referred to the prices obtained by many distinguished authors for their works: Lord Byron had received for his works 33,500*l.*; Sir J. Mackintosh for his Fragments of English History 5000*l.*; the Rev. Messrs. Willmerforce for the Life of their Father 4500*l.*; Messrs. for the Life of Byron 3000 guineas; and Southey for the Life of Cowper 1000*l.* As to authors who did not write anything worth remembering, and they were the great majority, no legislation could give them protection.

* See ante, pp. 89 et seq., observations on this Bill.

Mr. Milnes argued, that an extension of copyright would not, to any extent, increase the dearth of books.

Several other members addressed the House. The result was, that Clauses 1 and 2 were put and agreed to.

Clause 3, giving an author copyright for his life and twenty-five years after, was altered, to the effect, that copyright should subsist for forty-two years certain; but if the author was living at the expiration of the forty-two years, then for seven years further.

The subsequent clauses, up to clause 14 inclusive, were then agreed to; and the committee reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on the 20th April.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

A Bill intituled An Act to define the Jurisdiction of Justices in General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace.

Whereas it is expedient that the powers of justices in general and quarter sessions of the peace, with respect to the trial of offences, be better defined; be it enacted by, &c., That after the passing of this act neither the justices of the peace acting in and for any county, riding, division, or liberty, nor the recorder of any borough, shall, at any session of the peace, or at any adjournment thereof, try any person or persons for any treason, murder, or capital felony, or for any felony which, when committed by a person not previously convicted of felony, is punishable by transportation beyond the seas for life, or for any of the following offences; (that is to say),

1. Misprision of treason:
2. Offences against the Queen's title, prerogative, person, or government, or against either House of Parliament:
3. Offences subject to the penalties of premeditation:
4. Blasphemy and offences against religion:
5. Administering or taking unlawful oaths:
6. Perjury and subornation of perjury:
7. Making a false oath or affirmation, so as to be liable to the punishment of perjury.
8. Forgery:
9. Unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to crops of corn, grain, or pulse, or to any part of a wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze, or fern:
10. Bigamy, and offences against the laws relating to marriage:
11. Abduction of women and girls:
12. Endeavouring to conceal the birth of a child:
13. Offences against any provision of the laws relating to bankrupts and insolvents:
14. Composing, printing, or publishing blasphemous, seditious, or defamatory libels:
15. Bribery:
16. Unlawful combinations and conspiracies, except conspiracies or combinations to commit any offence which such justices or recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try when committed by one person:

Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to give authority to the justices of the peace acting in and for the cities of London and Westminster, the liberty of the tower of London, the borough of Southwark, and the counties of Middlesex, Essex, Kent, and Surrey, to try any person or persons for any offence committed or alleged to be committed within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, which such justices are restrained from trying under the provisions of an act passed in the 4 & 5 Will. 4, [c. 36.] intituled, "An Act for establishing a new Court for the Trial of Offences committed in the Metropolis and Parts adjoining."

2. That it shall be lawful for any judge of one of her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster, acting under any commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for any county, to issue, if he shall think fit, any writ or writs of certiorari or other process, directed to the justices of the peace acting in and for such county, riding, division, or liberty, or to the recorder of any borough situated within the said county, commanding the said justices and recorder severally to certify and return into the court holden under the authority of such commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery all indictments or presentments found or taken before any of the said justices of the peace or recorder of any offences which after the passing of this act such justices or recorder will not have jurisdiction to try, and the several recognizances, examinations, and depositions relative to such indictments and presentments; and also, if necessary, by writ or writs of habeas corpus, to cause any person or persons who may be in the custody of any gaol or prison, charged with any such offence, to be removed into the custody of the keeper of the common gaol of the county, so that the same offences may be dealt with, tried, and determined according to law, under the authority of the said commission.

3. That every recognizance which shall have been entered into for the prosecution of any person at any court of sessions of the peace, for any offence which after the passing of this act such court will not have jurisdiction to try, and every recognizance for the appearance, as well of any witness to give evidence upon any bill of indictment or presentment for any such offence, as of any person to answer our lady the Queen for or concerning any such offence, or to answer generally before such court, shall, in case any writ of certiorari or habeas corpus be issued for the purpose of removing such indictment or presentment, or such person so in custody as aforesaid, be obligatory on the parties bound by such recognizance to prosecute and appear and give evidence and do all other things therein mentioned, with reference to the indictment or presentment or person so removed as aforesaid, before the justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery acting in and for that county, in like manner as if such recognizance had been originally entered into for prosecuting such offence, appearing, or giving evidence, or doing such other things before the said justices of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery: Provided always, that one week's notice shall have been given, either personally or by leaving the same at the place of residence as of which the parties bound by such recognizance are therein described, to appear before the court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, instead of the said court of sessions of the peace: Provided also, that the judge who shall grant such writ of certiorari or habeas corpus shall cause the party applying for such writ or writs, whether he be the prosecutor or party charged with such offence, to enter into a recognizance, in such sum, and with or without sureties, as the judge may direct, conditioned to give such notice as aforesaid to the parties bound by such recognizance to appear before the said court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, instead of before the said court of sessions of the peace respectively, and to do such other things with reference to the indictment, presentment, or person removed, as such court or judge shall direct.

4. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of parliament.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PRACTICE OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

To Attorneys and Solicitors.

55, Chancery-lane, 9th April, 1842.

FOR the convenience of persons in the Western and Central Districts of London, and particularly of Gentlemen connected with the Law, THE LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY have opened a Branch Office at 55, Chancery-lane, where Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information connected with the business of the Company, may be procured; and where Examinations of Parties whose Lives are proposed for Assurance may be taken, and Policies effected, as at the Chief Office of the Company, in Charlotte-row, Mansion-house.

Your attention is solicited to some of the distinguishing features of this Company, which have been introduced after mature deliberation, and which will be most conveniently pointed out by referring to Policies, as Money Transaction and Family Provision Policies.

MONEY TRANSACTION POLICIES.—Your professional experience and acquaintance with the records of the Courts of Law and Equity, must have convinced you that considerable changes were required in the practice and rules of Life Offices, to render this class of Policies valid and unimpeachable documents of security, which no unforeseen circumstances or future accidents could invalidate. This Company has endeavoured, and they think successfully, to render their Policies as indefeasible and negotiable securities as is possible, consistently with a due regard to the safety of the contracting parties; and to effect this object the Company has introduced the following clause into their Deed of Settlement:—

CLAUSE 78.—“That every Policy issued by the Company shall be indefeasible and indisputable, and the fact of the issuing of the same shall be conclusive evidence of its validity; and it shall not be lawful for the Company to delay payment of the sum assured thereby, on the ground of any error, mistake or omission, however important, made by or on the part of the person or persons effecting the same; and that, on the contrary, the amount receivable under the same shall be paid at the time stipulated by the Policy, to the person entitled thereto, as if no such error, mistake or omission had been made or discovered, unless the Policy shall have been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.”

FAMILY PROVISION POLICIES.—In the well-founded belief that Life Assurance business is profitable, persons making provision for their families, and contemplating a long duration of time between the date of the Policy and the claim to arise under it, generally prefer Assurances which may carry with them a right to participate in the profits to be realized by the Company during the currency of their Policies. By the Deed of Constitution of this Company, the participating Assured are entitled to the WHOLE OF THE MUTUAL PROFITS, as if they had been Assured in a purely Mutual Society; and they have, at the same time, the security not only of the Funds of the Company, arising from the accumulated premiums, but also the proprietary funds and subscribed Capital of the Company. To the Shareholders are allotted only those profits which are realized by the investment of their own paid capital, and from the excess of the premiums derived from the Non-participating Assurances. This mode of Division of Profits is peculiar to this Company.

In order to provide against the defeat of a Policy in the hands of a CREDITOR, by the DEBTOR, whose Life is Assured living the country, and going beyond the prescribed limits, the Company grant WHOLE WORLD POLICES, whereby, on condition of receiving an extra premium, varying in amount according to the circumstances of the case, but fixed and determined at the time of issuing the Policy, the debtor, on whose Life an Assurance has been effected, is entitled to go to or reside in any part of the world, without invalidating the Assurance.

To enable a party to effect an Assurance at the LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, and to entitle him to discontinue it at a less sacrifice than by any other plan, a seven years' Half-premium system has been introduced; and, upon comparing the following scale with any other which has been devised for reducing present payments, it will be seen how much more economically a less transaction can be fortified by this kind of Policy than by any other. The Half-premium system possesses a further advantage over temporary Assurances, or those for a Term of Years, from the Assured having the option of continuing for Life the Policy which he may have procured for a mere temporary purpose.

LONDON, APRIL 16, 1842.

THE new Bankruptcy Bill (see ante, p. 96) differs in some important particulars from the existing law; and in order to facilitate the labour of those of our readers whom inclination or interest may lead to analyse and consider the propositions embodied in the proposed law, we will point out the material differences in the order of the clauses.

At present, the petitioning creditor must, before any fiat can be granted, give a bond to the Lord Chancellor, conditioned for proving his debt, as well before the commissioners as upon any trial at law, in case the due issuing of the commission be contested; and also for proving that, at the time the commission is taken out, the party had committed an act of bankruptcy. The object of the bond is to prevent the fraudulent or malicious taking out of a commission.

This is, by clause 3, to be done away with thus far—that it is to be in the discretion of the Lord Chancellor, on a petition for a fiat being presented, to dispense with the petitioner's bond.

The next new feature of the proposed measure is, the power given to the Court which shall be authorised to proceed in the prosecution of the fiat, to cause the party against whom it shall have issued, to be apprehended, and to cause his property to be seized under a warrant, if the Court shall be satisfied by evidence supported by the oaths of two or more credible witnesses, that there is probable cause for believing that he is about to quit the country, or to remove or conceal any of his goods with intent to defraud his creditors. This seems, if strictly guarded, a very wise provision for the protection of creditors against an unprincipled debtor.

By the present law, a commission may be supported by an act of bankruptcy committed at any time previous to the sealing of the fiat. It is proposed by the new Bill, that an act of bankruptcy shall not support a commission, if it has been committed more than twelve months before the issuing of the fiat. The rule that an act of bankruptcy concerted between a bankrupt and the petitioning creditor will not support a fiat, is to be abolished by sect. 8; which proposes, that a bankruptcy concerted between the bankrupt and any creditor, or other person, shall not invalidate the fiat.*

Sect. 10 nearly follows the Bill proposed during the last Session of the late Parliament, and adds to the list of persons directly liable to the Bankrupt Laws, livery-stable-keepers, coach-proprietors, carriers, ship-owners, auctioneers, apothecaries, market-gardeners, cow-keepers, and some others; persons who, at present, can only be included sub modo in the class of persons liable to the Bankrupt Laws; that is, who are not within those laws merely as carrying on their respective businesses, but only if they carry them on in a particular way. Livery-stable-keepers, apothecaries, brick-makers, for instance, and in fact all who, not being traders in the strictest sense of the word, fall within the definition of persons who, either for themselves, or as agents or factors for others, seek their living by buying and selling, or by buying and letting for hire, or by the workmanship of goods or commodities, are at present, as it is well known, liable or not to become bankrupts, according to the mode in which they carry on their trade. For instance, a livery-stable-keeper is not liable, as such, to become a bankrupt; but if he add to his vocation of a livery-stable-keeper, the buying of hay or other food, and the supplying of such food to horses standing in the stables, or selling again such hay to anybody, generally, then he is liable. So, an apothecary who sells drugs only to his own patients, is not liable; but if he also sells them to any person applying, he is liable. Again, with respect to brick-making, salt-making, and many other trades, or at least vocations in the nature of trades, it has been held, that he who makes the saleable article from the produce of his own land, is not liable to be a bankrupt; whether he is if he buys the materials for the purpose of making, and does therewith make and sell the saleable article, seems unsettled. (Archbold's Bankruptcy, 9th edit. p. 44, and the case there referred to).

All these unsubstantial distinctions are a fruitful source of litigation, and are, we think, wisely removed, so far as it extends, by the 10th clause of the Lord Chancellor's Bill. But there will still be left open questions as to many vocations which are, in their nature, principally professional, but, in their incidents, trading. Thus, for instance, teachers of the fine arts cannot be said, in strictness, to seek their living by buying and selling; yet they generally do buy and sell the materials with which their pupils are supplied, and they do so as a part of their means of obtaining an income. In a sense, therefore, such persons seek their living by buying and selling. Whether such persons would fall within the Bankrupt Laws has never, we believe, been decided, though it has been held, indeed, that a schoolmaster is not liable to be made bankrupt, by reason of buying books and selling them to his scholars.

Sections 11 to 20 introduce an extension of the present law. By the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, it is made an act of bankruptcy if a trader, against whom an affidavit of debt of a certain amount is filed in the Court of Bankruptcy, shall not, within twenty-one days after service of such affidavit, pay such debt, or compound for the same, or enter into a bond to pay such sum as shall be recovered in an action which shall have been brought. This principle is more fully developed in the proposed Bill.

The 36th, 38th, 39th and 40th clauses, are the same as the corresponding clauses in the Bill referred to, (ante, vol. 5, p. 938), substituting the discretion of the Court acting in the prosecution of a fiat for the consent of creditors in respect to the grant of a certificate to the bankrupt, subject only to a right in the creditor of appearing to oppose the grant of the certificate; and providing for the prevention of any imposition on the Court as to the real merits, by avoiding contracts or securities given to any creditor for the purpose of procuring the withholding of opposition by such creditor.

The principal new feature of the proposed Bill is, however, the substitution of permanent District Courts of Bankruptcy, (sect. 56), to act in the prosecution of fiats in bankruptcy in the country, instead of the Commissioners to whom, under the present law, country fiats are addressed. The new Courts will have all the powers of a court of record, and will have authority to take evidence, either viva voce, or in writing.

The 78th clause proposes the creation of a new officer in the shape of a "Master," whose special duty is to be that which is at present committed to the care of the Commissioners acting in the prosecution of the fiat; viz. the taxation of the bills of costs of the solicitors. The Master is also to tax the bills of charges of auctioneers, appraisers, brokers, valuers, and accountants, subject to review by one of the Commissioners of bankruptcy acting in London.

We have now, as briefly as possible, pointed out the principal features of novelty characterising the measure proposed by the Lord Chancellor. On the details of a Bill so extensive in its objects, we have not space to offer any comment. That, in its general principles, it affords promise of a considerable improvement in the practice in bankruptcy, particularly in working country fiats, is, however, we think apparent. The substitution of permanent, well-organized District Courts, presided over by men of competent ability, who, being judges, will have their whole time engaged, and their whole reputation involved in the execution of their judicial duties, cannot but be an advantage in the dispatch of bankruptcy business. In fact, the District Courts being put on the same footing, and provided with the same means for the efficient discharge of judicial duties as the present London Commissioners' Courts, there can be no reason why they should not become tribunals equally efficient, or, in other words, tribunals calculated satisfactorily to meet the wants of bankruptcy suitors.

We know not what counsel have done to offend all mankind; but, of late, they seem to be the giants against which every aspirant for public applause sets his lance in rest. Not long ago, a declaration made by the Solicitor-General, in his place in Parliament, was distorted by a public writer into what it certainly did not import, an assertion, that the speeches of counsel in Courts of Justice are useless, or worse than useless. And now we have as a crowning mercy, (see our Parliamentary Summary), a proposition, that the House of Commons, in reference to Election Committees, shall compel counsel to select their Court, and not go into any other!

The House of Commons is, undoubtedly, very powerful; far be it from us to dispute generally the extent of its jurisdiction; but there are things which even the House of Commons cannot do. It can, undoubtedly, prohibit counsel from appearing at all in its Committees; it can, as undoubtedly, prevent counsel from appearing in particular Committees; but if it assume to open its Committees to counsel, we do not see how it can compel any counsel to select a particular Committee, any more than it can compel him to hold briefs. But apart from these considerations, we would ask, how the suitor could be benefited by any such measures as those embodied in the resolutions referred to in our Parliamentary Summary? If the grievance be, that eminent counsel are retained on several Committees, and can only attend some, the remedy is in the hands of the suitor. Let him not retain counsel whom he knows, or can easily ascertain, to be already more than fully engaged. But if suitors will continue to think it their interest to select counsel with regard only to their eminence, and not to their multiplied engagements, (and if they do think so, they have a right to act on their opinion,) how will the matter be mended by excluding counsel from more than one Committee in a day? The only result would be, that a fierce rivalry would rise up among suitors for the possession of the favourite advocate, and instead of paying a reasonable fee for the chance of obtaining the whole or a portion of his time, they would have to pay a most exorbitant one for the certainty of securing him. We apprehend, that whatever may be the true doctrine with regard to trade in those departments which now engross the attention of the Legislature, the principles of free trade must at least be suffered to exist, to the fullest extent, in the selection of counsel; and that the only remedy for the inconvenience of counsel being engaged in too many courts, is the exercise by Courts of their undoubted right to proceed in the matters before them in the order in which they are set down, whether counsel be in attendance or not.

It will be seen by our Parliamentary Summary, that the House of Lords has rejected Lord Campbell's Bill for abolishing the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and cutting the Lord Chancellor in two halves; whereof one was to preside over the Court of Chancery without being Chancellor, and the other was to be Chancellor without any concern with the Court of Chancery. We confess we always thought, as we have already ventured with great submission to express, (ante, p. 69), that a plan, which had for its main-spring the total destruction of a Court on which, no more than eight years ago, the Legislature had lavished abundant care and consideration, was upon the face of it, to say the least, a very singular one. And when we recollect that the secondary object of this plan, was to render useless all that the Legislature did, only at the close of the last Session of Parliament, it seems difficult to understand what could have been the mental process by which a sound lawyer and clear-headed man, such as the promoter of the defunct bills undoubtedly is, could have arrived at the generation of so fantastic a dream.

It is scarcely consistent with our conviction of the great ability of the late Lord Chancellor of Ireland, to suppose that he could have proposed such a measure at such a time, in sober earnest; and knowing, as all men do, his Lordship's reputation for playfulness and sportive ebullitions of fancy, we are driven to the supposition, that he must have been disporting himself with a little attempt at a mauvaise plaisanterie. Be that as it may, the bills are at an end for the present; and we sincerely trust that it may be long ere we have again to comment upon any others of the same character.

ORDER ISSUED BY THE LORD CHANCELLOR,
11th April, 1842.

The Right Hon. John Singleton Lord Lyndhurst, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Hon. Henry Lord Langdale, Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. Sir Lancelot Shadwell, Vice-Chancellor of England, the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce, and the Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor Sir James Wigram, doth hereby, in pursuance of an act of parliament passed in the fourth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery," and of an act passed in the fourth and fifth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled, "An Act to amend an act of the fourth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for facilitating the Administration of Justice in the Court of Chancery'" order and direct in manner following, that is to say—

I. That in cases where the defendant shall not have put in his answer in due time after appearance, and the plaintiff shall be unable with due diligence to procure a writ of attachment to be executed against such defendant, by reason of his being out of the jurisdiction of the court, or being concealed, or for any other cause, then such defendant shall, for the purposes of this Order, be deemed to have absconded to avoid the process of this court.

That in cases where any defendant, who may be so deemed to have absconded, shall have appeared by his own Clerk in Court, or an appearance having been entered for him under the 8th of the Orders of the 26th day of August, 1841, he shall have afterwards appeared by his own Clerk in Court, the plaintiff may serve upon such Clerk in Court a notice, that, on a day in such notice named, (being not less than fourteen days after the service of such notice), the court will be moved, that the bill may be taken pro confesso against such defendant; and the plaintiff is, upon the hearing of such motion, to satisfy the court that such defendant ought, under the provisions of this Order, to be deemed to have absconded, and the court being so satisfied, and the answer not being filed, may, if it shall so think fit, order the bill to be taken pro confesso against such defendant, either immediately, or at such time, or upon such further notice, as under the circumstances of the case the court may think proper.

That in cases where any defendant, who may be so deemed to have absconded, shall have had an appearance entered for him under the 8th of the Orders of the 26th day of August, 1841, and he shall not afterwards have appeared by his own Clerk in Court, the plaintiff may cause to be inserted in the London Gazette a notice, that on a day in such notice named (being not less than four weeks after the first insertion of such notice in the London Gazette) the court will be moved, that the bill may be taken pro confesso against such defendant, and the plaintiff is, upon the hearing of such motion, to satisfy the court that such defendant ought, under the provisions of this Order, to be deemed to have absconded, and that such notice of motion has been inserted in the London Gazette at least once in every week from the time of the first insertion thereof, up to the time for which the said notice shall have been given; and the court being so satisfied, and the answer not having been filed, may, if it shall so think fit, order the bill to be taken pro confesso against such defendant, either immediately, or at such time, or upon such further notice as, under the circumstances of the case, the court may think proper.

II. That upon default by an infant defendant in not appearing to, or not answering the bill, the court may, upon motion, order that the Senior Six Clerk not towards the cause may be assigned guardian of such infant defendant, by whom he may appear to and answer, or may answer the bill and defend the suit, upon the court being satisfied that such defendant is an infant, and if the infant has not appeared, that the subpoena to appear to and answer the bill was duly served, and (whether the infant has appeared or not) that a notice of such motion was (after the expiration of the time for appearing to or answering the bill, and at least six clear days before the hearing of such motion) served upon or left at the dwelling-house of the person, with whom or under whose care such infant defendant was at the time of serving the subpoena, and was also served upon or left at the dwelling-house of the father or guardian (if any) of such infant, where the person with whom or under whose care the infant was at the time of such service shall not be the father or guardian of the infant, unless the court at the time of hearing such motion shall think fit to dispense with such last-mentioned service.

III. That the plaintiff shall, without special leave of the court, be at liberty to serve any notice of motion, or other notice, or any petition, personally or at the dwelling-house or office of any defendant, who having been duly served with subpoena to appear to and answer the bill shall not have caused an appearance to be entered by his own Clerk in Court at the time for that purpose limited by the General Orders of the Court.

IV. That the first, second, third, fourth, and fifth of the Orders of the 26th day of August, 1841, shall not take effect until further order.

V. That the twenty-second of the Orders of the 26th day of August, 1841, shall be suspended until further order.

VI. That the Orders of the 26th day of August, 1841, shall be amended as to numbers X. XI. XII. and XLVII. in manner following; (that is to say,)

X. That no Writ of Execution shall hereafter be issued for the purpose of requiring or compelling obedience to any Order or Decree of the High Court of Chancery, but that the party required by any such Order or Decree to do any act shall, upon being duly served with such Order or Decree, be held bound to do such act in obedience to the Order or Decree.

XI. That if any party, who is by an Order or Decree ordered to pay money, or to do any other act in a limited time, shall, after due service of such Order or Decree, refuse or neglect to obey the same according to the exigency thereof, the party prosecuting such Order or Decree shall, at the expiration of the time limited for the performance thereof, be entitled to a writ or writs of attachment against the disobedient party, and in case such party shall be taken or detained in custody under any such writ of attachment without obeying the same Order or Decree, then the party prosecuting the same Order or Decree shall, upon the sheriff's return that the party has been so taken or detained, be entitled to a commission of sequestration against the estate and effects of the disobedient party, and in case the sheriff shall make the return non est inventus to such writ or writs of attachment, the party prosecuting the same Order or Decree shall be entitled, at his option, either to a commission of sequestration in the first instance, or otherwise to an Order for the Serjeant-at-Arms, and to such other process as he hath hitherto been entitled to upon a return non est inventus made by the Commissioners named in a Commission of Rebellion issued for the non-performance of an Order or Decree.

XII. That every Order or Decree requiring any party to do an act thereby ordered, shall state the time, or the time after service of the Order or Decree, within which the act is to be done, and that upon the copy of the Order or Decree which shall be served upon the party required to obey the same, there shall be indorsed a memorandum in the words or to the effect following, viz.:-

"If you the within-named A. B. neglect to obey this Order (or Decree) by the time therein limited, you will be liable to be arrested under a writ of attachment issued out of the High Court of Chancery, or by the Serjeant-at-Arms attending the same Court, and also be liable to have your estate sequestered for the purpose of compelling you to obey the same Order (or Decree)."

XLVII. That a creditor who has come in and established his debt before the Master, under a Decree or Order in a suit, shall be entitled to the costs of so establishing his debt, and the sum to be allowed for such costs shall be fixed by the Master, without taxation, at the time the Master allows the debt of such creditor, unless the Master shall think that such costs ought to be taxed in the regular mode, in which case the same shall be so taxed by the Master, and the amount of such costs, or the sum allowed in respect thereof, shall be added to the debt so established.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, April 11.

Lord Campbell moved the order of the day for the second reading of the Appeals Transfer Bill, the Appellate Jurisdiction Bill, and the Administration of Justice Bill.

The order of the day having been read, Lord Campbell said, the three Bills were so intimately connected, that he would, in his observations, treat them as one measure. The great objects he had in view were, the appointment of one Supreme Tribunal of Appeal for the whole Empire, and giving to the Crown the power, if necessary, of calling together the House of Lords in its judicial character, in the recess during a prorogation of Parliament, and also the appointment of a permanent Judge in Equity. His Lordship then went over the arguments that have been already so frequently urged against the sitting of the Lord Chancellor on appeals in the House of Lords; and in proof of its effect on suitors in determining appeals, his Lordship mentioned, that, during four years, in which Lord Abinger sat as Chief Baron, presiding on the Equity side of the Exchequer, there were 120 appeals from that Court to the House of Lords, while there were, during the same time, only six from the Lord Chancellor. He then passed on to the question of the Privy Council, and discussed the probability of conflict of decision between that Court, as at present constituted, and the House of Lords. His Lordship then met the anticipated argument that his plan was an innovation, by shewing, that, in the reign of Richard 2, there was only one Court of Appeal in the country, viz. the House of Lords, and that the Privy Counsellors then attended and gave their advice in the same way as the Judges now do. He contended, that, at present, there were few appeals from the Australian Colonies, the West India Islands, and Canada, on account of the great inconvenience and expense of such appeals. If an efficient Court of Appeal, such as he proposed, were constituted, such appeals would much increase, and greater satisfaction would be given to suitors. With respect to the providing a permanent head to the Court of Chancery, he thought that was allowed on all hands to be desirable. He concluded, by moving the second reading of the Bill for transferring the Appellate Jurisdiction of the Privy Council to the House of Lords.

The Lord Chancellor, in a speech of considerable length, replied to the arguments of the noble Lord. He said, the Bill of his noble friend had one singular effect—that it excluded from the Supreme Court of Appeal, not only the existing Lord Chancellor, but former Lord Chancellors. The measure he said was, in effect, one measure, although divided into three Bills; it was based entirely on the abolition of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. His Lordship then went on to shew, that the Judicial Committee, as at present constituted, was an efficient and satisfactory tribunal; and the question was, not what had been its constitution in remote times, or what was the history of the jurisdiction of that House, but what would practically work well in the present day. The Privy Council had, as at present constituted, disposed of all arrears, and continued to dispatch business as it arose. It did so, not by hasty decision, for there was no Court which gave more anxious and laborious attention to the cases before it than that Court. The judgments were carefully prepared and written, that they might be given with the greater deliberation. The fluctuating nature of the tribunal was its very merit, inasmuch as the multifarious character of its business was thus provided for. In cases involving the common law, there was the attendance of the Judges; for cases coming from Courts of Equity, there was the attendance of some of the Equity Judges; and for the Colonial business, they had the assistance of Judges who had presided in the Colonial Tribunals. It was said, that the Judges of the Privy Council were voluntary, and that that was an evil. But they were not voluntary. They were invested with the dignity of Privy Councillors for the express purpose of sitting in the Privy Council as Judges; and if they were not compellable to sit, in the strict sense, yet they were bound in honour and in duty to give their attendance. There were, he admitted, some trifling inconveniences in the constitution of that Court, but they were inconveniences which might easily be removed without so rash a measure as the total destruction of the entire Court. With regard to that portion of the plan which went to take the Lord Chancellor altogether out of the Court of Chancery, he said, if the Lord Chancellor was to be a person who had never been in a Court of Equity all his life, and who therefore had no opportunity of acquiring knowledge of the practice of Courts of Equity, he must necessarily be crammed for the occasion by his assistants; rather than send appeals to such a Chancellor, it would be better to put an end to appeals altogether. He concluded, by moving, that the Bill be read that day six months.

After some observations from Lord Brougham, who also disapproved Lord Campbell's measure, his Lordship replied; and the question being put, the amendment was carried, and the Bills, therefore, were lost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, April 12.

Mr. R. Wason rose pursuant to notice, to call the attention of the House to the practice adopted by counsel before its Committees, with a view to providing a remedy; having for its object the advantage of suitors, and upholding the dignity of the judicial tribunals of the House. The honorable gentleman proceeded at some length to descant upon the inconvenience arising from counsel engaging to attend several Committees of the House at the same time; and urged, that the House should follow the example of the Court of Chancery, compelling counsel, with the aid of the solicitors, to select a particular court, and not be running from one to another, to the great confusion and delay of business*. The honorable gentleman concluded by moving two resolutions; first, that parties attending any Committee of the House, and having liberty to appear by counsel, do, at the first sitting of the Committee, deliver to the chairman the names of the counsel retained, which shall be inserted in the minutes of the Committee; secondly, that, upon no account shall any counsel appear before two Committees on the same day, unless one of them shall have previously closed its proceedings.

Sir James Graham defended the Bar attending Committees, against the animadversions of the honorable member.

Mr. Wallace would wish to prevent counsel speaking at all, until the evidence was gone into; he thought great benefit would result, if counsel were always compelled to remain silent till the business of the Committee was settled.

Mr. S. Wortley said the evil was in the inefficient character of the tribunals for trying election petitions. The plan of the Right Honorable Baronet, (Sir R. Peel), for the constitution of election committees, had signally failed; he (Mr. Wortley) thought it in truth impossible to construct a good tribunal, while they confined themselves to the materials to be found in that House.

Mr. O'Connell also defended the conduct of the Bar. He thought that it was precisely, in conducting the examination of witnesses, that the aid of lawyers of experience and ability was most wanted. The great evil was in the constitution of the committees. Now, it was thought that their decisions were influenced, not it was true by the politics of the members, but by those of the chairman.

After some further observation from several members, Mr. Wason withdrew his motion.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The following gentlemen have been appointed Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—Charles Perceval Titt, of Wallop, and of Broughton, Hampshire; Charles Carter, jun., of Bideford, Devonshire; Thomas Robert Jennings, of Evershol, Devonshire.

* The honorable member is misinformed as to the alleged practice of the Court of Chancery. That Court has, we believe, no power to compel, and certainly does not compel counsel to select any particular court. The selection of courts is confined to the counsel within the bar, and has been adopted by them voluntarily, for the convenience both of their clients and themselves.

LONDON, APRIL 23, 1842.

WE are glad to see, that, in Committee, the 24th clause of the Copyright Bill is, for the present, withdrawn. That clause, it will be recollected, purported to give to the Courts of Equity and Law, on application by motion, in a summary way, supported by affidavit, power to make such orders for the issuing of an injunction, or for continuing and enforcing, or dissolving such injunction, "as according to the course and practice of each of such courts respectively can or may now be made in a suit regularly instituted." On this we took the liberty of observing, in a former page, (ante, p. 91), that, according to the course and practice of the Courts of Common Law, orders for injunctions never are made. In the discussion which took place in the House of Commons on this point, (see our Parliamentary Summary, p. 143), a learned member, himself the author of a work in which this subject is incidentally treated, asserted that the Judges of the Common Law have now power to grant injunctions, though he admitted that such power is not exercised. On turning to that learned member's work, we do not find, however, any mention of the fact that the Courts of Common Law possess such jurisdiction. But we do find in the supplement published by him in 1832†, the following passage (p. 68):—"The proceedings in Equity are so very expensive, that, if they could be dispensed with, a great saving in time and money would arise to patentees. The inventor, by taking proceedings in two courts (Law and Equity) is much distracted. If a power were given to the Common Law Courts in which actions have been commenced, to restrain the infringer, on a motion in term, or summons in vacation, made by the patentee, the remedy would be quick in its operation, less expensive, and quite as efficient as an injunction issued from a Court of Equity. . . . The only good that can arise from Courts of Equity meddling in patents for inventions is obtained from the account which the infringer is directed to keep. It could be kept in a Common Law Court quite as well."

It is to be inferred from these passages, that, at that period, the learned member had found no authority for the position, that Courts of Common Law have power to grant injunctions; nor are we able to find in any book of practice any allusion to the alleged jurisdiction as a general one. The ancient remedies by writs of estrepement of waste, and of quod permittat prosternere in regard to nuisance, were, it is true, remedies having the effect of an injunction in those particular cases, so far as that they were preventive; but there the similarity stops. They were not interlocutory applications, but separate actions founded on special writs, and afford no ground for saying, that Courts of Law have ever asserted a general jurisdiction to grant injunctions against any wrongful acts. In a work of high authority, it is laid down, "that the writ of injunction is peculiar to Courts of Equity, though there are some cases where Courts of Law may exercise analogous powers; such as by the writ of prohibition and estrepement in cases of waste." (Story, 2 Eq. Jur. 154). And Lord Eldon, who was a Judge of the Common Law as well as of Equity, stated the ground of the jurisdiction in Equity to grant injunctions in cases of copyright, to be the inadequacy of the remedy by successive actions, (Jac. 314 and 472), a reason which, if a Court of Law could interfere by injunction, would have gone merely to shew, that relief at law should be sought by injunction, and not that there was any necessity to go into Equity. It is, we admit, at all times difficult to say, strictly, what are the powers of any of the superior courts; but we believe that, in practice, it is a tolerably settled rule with courts, to act on the doctrine, that what they never have done, they have not, or at least will not, assert jurisdiction to do. If, therefore, there were not such strong grounds as there are for contending, that Courts of Law have no power to grant injunctions, it is, at least, very improbable that they would grant them, if only authorized to do so on the ground of their existing course and practice; and if it be desirable that Courts of Common Law should exercise a power of granting injunctions in matters of copyright, the Copyright Act should either declare that they now have such power, or de novo confer the power upon them.

Whether it is expedient that Courts of Law should exercise such a power is another question. An injunction is, in most cases, of no use without an account; and the power of granting an injunction involves of course the necessity of having power to order an account, for the taking of which Courts of Law are at present not provided with adequate machinery. It involves also the engrafting on the practice of those Courts the doctrine of acting in personam, not to give damages for a wrong actually done, but to prevent the commission of an act which may or may not turn out to be a wrong. For it should not be forgotten, that, in general, an order for an injunction is no determination of the right, but only a decision, that, while the right is doubtful, an act shall not be done, for which, if it turn out ultimately to be a wrongful act, no adequate damages can be recovered. The rules of pleading and practice of Courts of Common Law, are all framed in reference to the general principle, that Courts of Law give a remedy for that which is established to be a wrongful act; and that they do not interfere against any party until they have ascertained that he is a wrong-doer. These rules may therefore well be and are, in fact, much more stringent and inflexible than the corresponding rules in Equity. And much difficulty and oppression may be caused, if, without keeping the principle alluded to in view, Courts of Law are called upon under an Act of Parliament to administer a system of interlocutory judicial interference, which is based on the very opposite principle to that of Courts of Law, viz. that the Court merely interferes for the protection of property while it is unascertained which party is the wrong-doer.

Our attention has been called, by a pamphlet recently published*, to a subject of so painful a character, that we should shrink from it with extreme disgust and annoyance, were we not led to conceive, that, as the conductors of a Journal devoted to the interests of the Legal Profession, we are bound to take upon ourselves, in some sense, the office of Censores Morum, and to invoke the aid of the honourable majority of the Profession whenever we are apprized of the existence of practices calculated to bring disgrace on the whole body.

It is alleged by the author of the pamphlet referred to, that, in the Crown Courts of Exeter, practices prevail to a fearful extent, which are obviously irreconcilable with the dignity and utility of the Bar, with the respectability of Attornies, and even with common honesty. Of the learned author of these charges we know nothing, except that he is a provincial Barrister of considerable standing. Whether the charges contained in his pamphlet can or cannot be supported by irresistible evidence, we have no knowledge. We should hope, for the honour of the Profession, that they are not capable of being so supported; that there are not in it any capable of such conduct as that stigmatised by Mr. Bird; and that it may turn out that the accuser has been misled. But, be that as it may, the charges have been publicly made; and it becomes the duty of every member of both branches of the Profession to urge that they should be publicly inquired into, in order that, if such practices do exist, those who are guilty of them may be driven out of the Profession as unworthy to mingle with honest men; and that, if they do not exist, the error of the accuser may be exposed, and the honour of the Profession redeemed.

Mr. Bird's charges are contained in four letters addressed to the Attorney-General. The first two relate principally to an alleged practice in the criminal courts at Exeter, of briefs being delivered to counsel, without fees being delivered at the same time; and of the subsequent payment of the fees being systematically neglected; and the two last refer to another alleged practice in the same courts, of attornies representing to prisoners that the fee necessary for retaining counsel is larger than it really is, for the purpose of obtaining from them as much money as possible; and, having obtained it, of neglecting their department in the defence of the prisoners. If the existence of these practices were proved, it would be almost needless to inquire which would be the worst, as both would be too disgracefully dishonest to permit one word to be said in their defence. There would be, however, this difference: that, while the one would be merely a departure from that integrity which ought to characterize all transactions of business, the other would be inhuman as well as dishonest. For, if there be one department of legal practice in which, more than in any other, it is the duty of the professional man to use every exertion consistent with honour to protect his client, it is that in which the client is struggling, not for a question of more or less property, but for his personal liberty, his reputation, and perhaps for his life. If the Law of England and the practice of the British Bar hold that no man accused of the blackest crime shall go undefended, what is the designation contemptuous enough to attach to those professional men, if any such there be, who shall systematically conspire to defraud a prisoner of his legal right, by taking from him money to procure his defence, and then abandoning or languidly conducting that defence? We repeat, that, on the ability of Mr. Bird to support his charges, we have no knowledge, and offer no opinion. But we call upon the Bar practising on the circuit to which his letters refer, we call upon all honourable men among the attornies on that circuit, and on that central society which in London has constituted itself the protector and censor of the junior branch of the profession, to sift the matter of Mr. Bird's letter to the bottom; to require from him proof of his charges; and, if such proof be sufficient to bring the charges home to any particular individuals, to take such steps as may not only punish the guilty, but prevent the recurrence of the offence.

* Letters to the Attorney-General on the Malpractices in the Crown Courts at Exeter, by Charles Bird, Esq., Barrister at Law.

Rebels.

The Law of Patents familiarly explained, for the Use of Inventors and Patentees. By WILLIAM CARPMAEL, Esq., of Lincoln's Inn. [Simpkin & Marshall.]

Mr. Carpmael is somewhat Blackstonian in his mode of viewing the law. That which is the law is to him all perfection; and he appears to have found out, what no lawyer on either side of Westminster Hall has found out, that the Law of Patents, as it is now settled, is so clear, so judicious, so beneficent, that under it the patentee and the public have all they can respectively desire; and that such is the security of patent rights, that it is now next to impossible to upset a patent containing a new invention. (See p. 86).

In these opinions we by no means coincide; on the contrary, we believe, that in spite of the good effect of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, the Law of Patents is still among the most uncertain and unprotective of our laws, and its practice among the most incumbered with proceedings which are useless if not actually prejudicial. Among the latter, may be reckoned that portion of the practice in obtaining patents, discussed by Mr. Carpmael in his fourth chapter, viz. the practice in regard to oppositions.

Mr. Carpmael's account of the nature of the caveat and the practice upon it is perfectly correct; and according to that account it is we think quite obvious, that in most cases, that is, as between two bonâ fide inventors, it leads to nothing whatever except a fruitless expenditure of fees by both parties; and that where A. has fraudulently obtained possession of B.'s invention, it is no protection to B., because, if A.'s patent be refused, he can by his power of publishing the invention, compel B. to grant him terms; or if he be only a little more dishonest, he can exhibit to the Attorney-General some imaginary invention, and reserve the real one for the patent, of which he may thus fraudulently obtain a grant. On the practice referred to by Mr. Carpmael, of impounding drawings in the Attorney-General's Office, and compelling the petitioner for a patent to confine his patent to the invention shewn to the Attorney-General, we will only say, that if that jurisdiction can be sustained, it is still a very inadequate protection, and that there are, at least, very serious grounds for doubt whether it might not be successfully resisted. (See 5 Jur. 1097).

Subject to these remarks on the straining of our author to make the Law of Patents appear more settled and attractive than the authorities warrant, we may pronounce his work one which, though not being or professing to be properly addressed to lawyers, may yet be read by them with advantage, on account of the additional light which the author's scientific illustrations throw on the subject.

At the same time, his exposition of the rules of the law, and the precautions proper to be taken by inventors in their proceedings, is sound and clear, particularly as regards the question of what is the proper subject-matter of a patent, and the specification. On the former point, Mr. Carpmael thus enumerates the classes of subjects which will support a patent:

"First, a new combination of mechanical parts or instruments, whereby a new machine is produced, though each of the parts be separately old and well known. Secondly, an improvement on any known machine, whereby such machine is rendered capable of performing more beneficially. Thirdly, where the vendible substance is the thing produced, whether by chemical or mechanical process, such as a new description of fabric. Fourthly, where an old substance is improved by some new working; the means of producing the improvement, in most instances, is patentable, whether chemical or mechanical. Fifthly, the application of a known substance or material to a new purpose, when there requires art to adapt it, is the subject of a patent."

In the chapter on the specification, (chap. 6), we find some judicious observations on the question of the quantity of invention necessary to support a patent. "It is evident," (says the author, p. 57), "that so much having been done in the arts and manufactures, there will, at times, be found considerable difficulty in ascertaining what is new in some branches of manufacture; yet it will be equally evident that when a beneficial result is obtained, and a manufacture brought into the market of a better quality, or produced at a less cost, there must be some point of novelty; and this point of novelty, in most instances, may be the subject of a patent. If the specification describe clearly the means of producing the beneficial result, and claim only for the point of novelty, which is the cause of improving the manufacture, or of reducing the price, such a patent would unquestionably stand."

And further, (p. 65), "It would be difficult to point out what quantity of invention is required to support a patent, supposing the specification to be well drawn; yet it may be stated, with some degree of confidence, that the smallness of the quantity of invention is not an objection to a patent, provided it is new and useful; more depends on the utility than on the extent of the invention."

On the whole, the work appears to us likely to be extremely useful to the class for whom it is specially intended, viz. inventors and others unlearned in the law; and not without use to professional readers, particularly as it contains information on many little points of practice not to be found in more learned works, and generally little known except by those habitually engaged in soliciting patents. Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, April 18.

The Municipal Corporations Bill went through committee pro forma, with an understanding, that certain amendments having been introduced, the Bill should be printed and re-committed.

Tuesday, April 19.

Mr. Jackson obtained leave to bring in, and afterwards brought in, a Bill to assimilate the Law in Ireland, as to the Punishment of Death, to the Law in England; and to abolish the Punishment of Death in certain Cases in Ireland, and to substitute other Punishment in Lieu thereof.

Wednesday, April 20.

The House went into committee on the Copyright Bill.

Mr. Wakley objected to clause 15, that it might preclude making extracts, so necessary for instance in school-books.

Mr. Godson said, the clause allowed extracts for purposes of criticism, judgment, or argument. He saw nothing in this clause to prevent the fair use of extracts for school-books. If the words "school-books" were specifically introduced, it would open the door to fraud.

The clause was agreed to, as were the following clauses to the 23rd inclusive.

On clause 24 being put, Mr. Aglionby objected, that, by that clause, judges of the common law as well as of equity, would be empowered to grant injunctions. He thought this was a new feature, rather than a re-enactment of the law of copyright.

Mr. Godson believed the power of granting injunctions was, at the present time, possessed by all the common law courts, though certainly such power was not exercised. He thought the clause ought to remain.

The clause was omitted, Lord Mahon expressing his intention to propose it again on bringing up the Bill. The remaining clauses of the Bill were agreed to.

Sir V. Blake moved the second reading of the Patents (Ireland) Bill, declaring his readiness to abandon all the clauses except that dispensing with the attendance of Irish students for certain terms in London, previous to being called to the Irish bar.

Mr. Serjt. Jackson opposed the Bill; and the second reading was negatived without a division.

Thursday, April 21.

The report on the Copyright Bill was brought up, and ordered to be reported with amendments, and to be re-committed on Tuesday (26th instant).

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PRACTICE OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

To Attorneys and Solicitors.

55, Chancery-lane, 9th April, 1842.

FOR the convenience of persons in the Western and Central Districts of London, and particularly of Gentlemen connected with the Law, THE LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY have opened a Branch Office at 55, Chancery-lane, where Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information connected with the business of the Company, may be procured; and where Examinations of Parties whose Lives are proposed for Assurance may be taken, and Policies effected, as at the Chief Office of the Company, in Charlotte-row, Mansion-house.

Your attention is solicited to some of the distinguishing features of this Company, which have been introduced after mature deliberation, and which will be most conveniently pointed out by referring to Policies, as Money Transaction and Family Provision Policies.

MONEY TRANSACTION POLICIES.—Your professional experience and acquaintance with the records of the Courts of Law and Equity, must have convinced you that considerable changes were required in the practice and rules of Life Offices, to render this class of Policies valid and unimpeachable documents of security, which no unforeseen circumstances or future accidents could invalidate. This Company has endeavoured, and they think successfully, to render their Policies as indefeasible and negotiable securities as is possible, consistently with a due regard to the safety of the contracting parties; and to effect this object the Company has introduced the following clause into their Deed of Settlement:—

CLAUSE 18.—“That every Policy issued by the Company shall be indefeasible and indisputable, and the fact of the issuing of the same shall be conclusive evidence of its validity; and it shall not be lawful for the Company to delay payment of the money assured thereby, on the ground of any error, mistake or omission, however important, made by or on the part of the person or persons effecting the same; and that, on the contrary, the amount receivable under the same shall be paid at the time stipulated by the Policy, to the person entitled thereto, as if no such error, mistake or omission had been made or discovered, unless the Policy shall have been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.”

FAMILY PROVISION POLICIES.—In the well-founded belief that Life Assurance business is profitable, persons making provision for their families, and contemplating a long duration of time between the date of the Policy and the claim to arise under it, generally prefer Assurances which may carry with them a right to participate in the profits to be realized by the Company during the currency of their Policies. By the Deed of Constitution of this Company, the participating Assured are entitled to the WHOLE OF THE MUTUAL PROFITS, as if they had been Assured in a purely Mutual Society; and they here, at the same time, the security not only of the Funds of the Company, arising from the accumulated premiums, but also the proprietary funds and subscribed Capital of the Company. To the Shareholders are allotted only those profits which are realized by the investment of their own paid capital, and from the excess of the premiums derived from the Non-participating Assurances. This mode of Division of Profits is peculiar to this Company.

In order to provide against the defeat of a Policy in the hands of a CREDITOR, by the DEBTOR, whose Life is Assured leaving the country, and going beyond the prescribed limits, the Company grant WHOLE WORLD POLICES, whereby, on condition of receiving an extra premium, varying in amount according to the circumstances of the case, but fixed and determined at the time of issuing the Policy, the debtor, on whose Life an Assurance has been effected, is entitled to go to or reside in any part of the world, without invalidating the Assurance.

To enable a party to effect an Assurance at the LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, and to entitle him to discontinue it at a less sacrifice than by any other plan, a seven years' Half-premium system has been introduced; and, upon comparing the following scale with any other which has been devised for reducing present payments, it will be seen how much more economically a loan transaction can be fortified by this kind of Policy than by any other. The Half-premium system possesses a further advantage over temporary Assurances, or those for a Term of Years, from the Assured having the option of continuing for Life the Policy which he may have procured for a mere temporary purpose.

THE COMMISSION allowed to Attorneys is 10l. per cent. upon the first, and 5l. per cent. upon all future premiums; and the Commission continues to be payable to the Attorney, who completed the Assurance with the Company, although the future premiums may be paid by others.

LONDON, APRIL 30, 1842.

A QUESTION arising out of the Law relating to Church-Rates has recently been discussed in the Court of Queen's Bench, to which it is important we think to call the attention of our readers, as its decision will ascertain the truth or falsehood of an impression which has long prevailed, that where the sum claimed for a church-rate is less than 10*l.*, and the validity of the rate or liability of the defendant is not disputed, but it is merely sought to enforce the payment, the magistrates have, by virtue of the 7th section of the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, an exclusive jurisdiction. The cognisance of church-rates belongs to the Spiritual Courts, and before the passing of the above statute, they could only be sued for and recovered in those Courts. (Degge, p. 1, c. 12; Gibson, 195; and 5 Rep. 66). But the proceedings in such Courts being attended with great delay and expense, and the sum sued for in most instances but small, the costs of the suit bore a very inordinate proportion to the debt itself; in consequence of which, when any person refused to pay a church-rate, it was either not enforced at all, or, if enforced, the proceedings were very oppressive, and much scandal was caused by them. To remedy this, among other evils of a like character, the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, was passed; and by sect. 7 of that act, reciting, that it was expedient that church-rates or chapel-rates of limited amount, unduly refused or withheld, should, in certain cases, be more easily and speedily recovered, it was enacted, that if any one duly rated to a church-rate or a chapel-rate, the validity whereof had not been questioned in any Ecclesiastical Court, should refuse or neglect to pay the same sum at which he was so rated, it should and might be lawful for any one justice of the peace of the same county, riding, city, liberty, or town corporate, where the church or chapel was situated, in respect whereof such rate should have been made, upon the complaint of any churchwarden or chapel-warden, who ought to receive and collect the same, by warrant under the hand and seal of such justice, to convene before any two or more such justices of the peace any person so refusing or neglecting to pay such rate, and to examine upon oath into the merits of the said complaint, and by order, under their hands and seals, to direct the payment of what should be due and payable in respect to such rate, so as the sum ordered and directed to be paid as aforesaid did not exceed 10*l.* over and above the reasonable costs and charges; and, after providing an appeal to the next quarter sessions, the section provides, that nothing therein contained should extend to alter or interfere with the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts to hear and determine causes touching the validity of any church-rate or chapel-rate, or from proceeding to enforce the payment of any such rate, if the same should exceed the sum of 10*l.*, from the party proceeded against; and provided likewise, that, if the validity of such rate, or the liability of the person from whom it was demanded to pay the same, were disputed, and the party disputing the same should give notice thereof to the justices, the justices should forbear giving judgment thereupon; and the person or persons demanding the same might then proceed to the recovery of their demand, according to due course of law, as theretofore used and accustomed. The first question which suggests itself in construing this proviso is, what is a sufficient notice of disputing the rate; In R. v. Milmarrow, (5 M. & S. 248), the party summoned said to the justices, "I will bring an action against any person who ventures to levy the rate; I think I have no right to pay, I have no claim or seat in the church;" and the Court decided that to be sufficient to prevent the justices from proceeding. But in R. v. Wrottesley, (1 B. & Adol. 648), where the attorney of the party stated to the justices that the validity of the rate was disputed, and a caveat had been entered for the purpose of trying the question, but did not state the objections to the rate, the court held, that the justices ought to hear the complaint; and Lord Tenterden said, "If, upon hearing, the party satisfies the justices there is a bona fide intention to dispute the rate, the proceeding before them will go no further." It would seem, therefore, that, although the justices have no power to decide upon the validity of the rate or the liability of the party summoned, yet they are incidentally to inquire into it for the purpose of judging of the bona fides of the intention to dispute. Suppose the party should state to the justices an objection manifestly untenable, are they, nevertheless, to proceed? The intention to dispute may be perfectly bona fide, although the grounds upon which that intention is founded are insufficient. The proviso does not seem calculated to effect the object for which it was inserted, and it would, we apprehend, be desirable that the party disputing the rate should be obliged to find sureties for the payment of the costs of the suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, if he should be unsuccessful, as is done in other proceedings before magistrates.

But the question to which we desire most to call the attention of our readers is, as we said before, whether, in cases where the rate claimed is less than 10*l.*, and the validity of it or the liability of the party is not disputed, the jurisdiction of the justices is co-ordinate with or exclusive of that of the Ecclesiastical Court.

From the passing of the 53 Geo. 3, c. 127, until 1830, it was the understanding of both the profession and the public that the justices had an exclusive jurisdiction. The doubt, however, arose in Ricketts v. Bodenham, (4 Adol. & Ell. 433), which was an application for a prohibition to the Ecclesiastical Court, on the ground, that the statute took away the jurisdiction; and the Court in that case seem to have thought, that the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts was, by implication, taken away; but the application was refused, on the ground that, upon examining the proceedings, the validity of the rate appeared to be disputed. The point was again raised in Thorogood's case, (12 Adol. & Ell. 183; 4 Jur. 937), where the Court said, it was not necessary for them to decide upon it, as it lay on the defendant to show the exception to the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court, and not on that Court to negative its existence. And in Reg. v. Baines, (12 Adol. & Ell. 210), the decision was to the same effect. In the recent case of Richards v. Dyke, not yet reported, and in which the Court has taken time to consider its judgment, the question was raised by a demurrer to a declaration in prohibition, on the ground that, as the rate demanded of the plaintiff in prohibition was less than the sum of 10*l.*, and there was no dispute as to the validity of the rate, or the plaintiff's liability, the Ecclesiastical Court had no jurisdiction; and it was contended, in argument, that the object of the statute was to give a greater facility for the recovery of church-rates; and as the Ecclesiastical Court was not expressly deprived of jurisdiction, it could not be taken away by inference only; against which it was urged, that the object of the legislature was to put an end to the scandal which had been caused by the suits in the Ecclesiastical Courts. With respect to the proviso upon which this doubt arises, it is to be observed, that the rule is, that a statute creating a new jurisdiction ought to be construed strictly, and the jurisdiction of the superior courts is not to be ousted but by express words or necessary implication. (10 Rep. 75; Stra. 258). Ricketts v. Bodenham the court thought, that, by the words "that nothing contained in the act should extend to alter or interfere with the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts to hear and determine causes touching the validity of a rate, or from enforcing the payment if the same should exceed 10*l.*," a distinction was made between suits in which the validity of a rate was questioned, and those in which the only object was to enforce payment. Effect may, however, be given to these words, by holding that the jurisdiction of the justices is only co-ordinate and not exclusive as even in the former case, the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts is altered and interfered with, and the implication that the justices have an exclusive jurisdiction is not a necessary one. If, as is probable, the Legislature at that time had in view, rather the ease and speedy recovery of church-rates, than the relief of the rate-payers, it is not an unnatural construction of the clause to hold that it was not to be compulsory upon the churchwardens to proceed before the justices and that they may still, if so advised, proceed at once in the Spiritual Courts. Nor does the latter provision necessarily militate against this view, as that may only show that the churchwardens shall be obliged, when there is a question proper to be decided by the Spiritual Courts, to have it so decided.

An analogous case to the present may be found in the acts relating to the recovery of tithes. By the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 74, it is expressly provided, that no proceedings shall be had in the superior courts for the recovery of tithes under the yearly value of 10*l.*, but that the person to whom the same is due shall proceed before the justices; although the 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 6, which first gave the justices jurisdiction, provided by sect. 8, that where the party insisted upon a right to be freed from the payment of the tithe, the justices should forbear to give judgment. If it were necessary in the last case expressly to exclude the jurisdiction of the superior courts, we think it a reasonable construction of the section relating to church-rates to hold, that, without such an express enactment, the jurisdiction of the superior courts is not taken away. If, however, the Court of Queen's Bench, before whom the question is now pending, shall decide, as we think they will, that the churchwardens are not to be compelled to proceed before the Justices, we apprehend it will be a proper case for the interference of the Legislature; for it cannot but be dangerous, at the present time, to leave in the churchwardens a power to sue in the Spiritual Courts for any sum, however small. Whatever the decision of the Court may be, it would be desirable that the matter should be set at rest by a legislative enactment.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

5 VICTORIA—April 26, 1842.

This Court will, on Saturday the 14th day of May next, hold Sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business now pending in the Special and New Trial Papers, and in giving judgment in pending cases.
By THE COURT.

NEW ORDERS.

The profession, it is to be hoped, are now beginning to relax the hostility with which, it was alleged, they regarded the Orders of August last. We say alleged, because we were never disposed to believe that the profession did really feel hostile to the alterations in practice which those Orders were intended to bring about. The principle upon which they were founded was, or ought to have been, sufficient to conciliate the minds of all honest practitioners, and to have secured their ready assistance in putting a fair construction upon them. Surely, to an honest man, it were worth the labour which he must bestow upon the subject, in order to understand the practical working of them, if he should find, that, in their results, they would tend to contribute to the benefit of the suitor, by abridging the length and lessening the difficulties of the suit. Surely if, in addition to their various duties and important avocations, judges and other eminent persons will consent to devote their time to the consideration of abuses, and the application of appropriate remedies, the humble practitioner cannot be heard to complain, that the promulgation of these remedies throws upon him the hard necessity of extending his labours, in order to appreciate and understand them. Some complaints, violent and clamorous indeed, were uttered against the Orders as soon as they appeared—before perhaps they were read—certainly before they were understood. They were, forsooth, the crude production of a judge retiring from the legal world, and eager to leave to the profession an earnest of his extra-judicial labours. They were promulgated at the wrong time. They would interfere with the working of the new Vice-Chancellor's courts, and again, the new Vice-Chancellor's courts would interfere with the working of the Orders. One writer tells us that they are still sub judice, although in the next line he proceeds to pass a severe sentence upon them*. We would ask those from whom these complaints came, were they candid? Were they not premature? We feel confident that the practical working of the Orders will be the best confutation of such hasty objectors.

In furtherance of the principle upon which the Orders of August last were based, another budget of Orders, bearing date 11th April, 1842, has made its appearance, and as they tend to enlarge or restrict, or in some way to modify the operation of the former Orders, we have thought that it may be serviceable to some of our readers to point out the reasons which it is presumed gave rise to them.

The 6th and 9th Orders of August, 1841, shortened the process of contempt for compelling an answer after appearance, by abolishing the intermediate steps of attachment with proclamations, writ of rebellion, and the order for the Serjeant-at-Arms, which were found to be unnecessarily long and expensive, and declared, that the plaintiff should be entitled, upon the sheriff's return of non est inventus, to a writ of sequestration, in the same manner as, under the old practice, he was entitled to such writ upon the like return made by the Serjeant-at-Arms. This alteration in the practice unquestionably conferred a great boon upon the plaintiff, while the requirements of the 9th Order protected the defendant from being taken by surprise. Nevertheless, it fell short of the great desideratum which it was framed to meet; inasmuch as, in cases where the plaintiff was desirous of having his bill taken pro confesso, it still left him under the necessity of carrying out the process of attachment to its final issue, and also of awaiting the return of the Serjeant-at-Arms, before he could fully avail himself of the benefit of Sir Edward Sugden's Act, 1 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 15, rule 1.

In order, therefore, to facilitate the process of taking a bill pro confesso, the first of these Orders declares, that where the defendant shall not have put in his answer in due time after appearance, and the plaintiff shall be unable, with due diligence, to procure an attachment to be executed against him, by reason of his being out of the jurisdiction, or being concealed, or for any other cause, such defendant shall, for the purposes of this Order, be deemed to have absconded to avoid process, i. e. without such proof of his having actually absconded to avoid process as was required by the 3rd section of Sir E. Sugden's Act. And in order to warn the defendant of the consequences of his neglect, and that he may not have the plaintiff's case established against him without due notice, the Order provides, that where a defendant who may, under the above definition, be deemed to have absconded, shall have appeared by his own clerk in court, or where, an appearance having been entered for him, he shall have afterwards appeared by his own clerk in court, (in each of which cases he may be supposed to be personally conversant of the proceedings in the cause), the plaintiff may proceed [in the manner therein prescribed] to get his bill taken pro confesso. So, in cases where a defendant, who may be deemed to be in the same predicament, shall have had an appearance entered for him, but shall not afterwards have appeared by his own clerk in court, the plaintiff, upon the insertion of a notice to that effect in the London Gazette, in manner therein prescribed, (which is the most feasible mode of making the defendant aware of the consequences of his neglect), may proceed to get his bill taken pro confesso.

This Order then places the process of taking a bill pro confesso upon the same footing with the practice established by the 21st and 44th Orders of August, 1841, viz. upon the default of the defendant to plead, answer, or demur, of filing a note traversing the case made by the bill, upon which, if the cause should come to a hearing, the plaintiff can take a decree absolute in the first instance. The result of decrees taken under these two processes is altogether different. In the latter case, the plaintiff must take such a decree as he can support by his pleadings and evidence; but a decree pro confesso is made upon the reading of the bill and taking the case made by it to be true. It is obvious that, in some instances, it will be to the plaintiff's advantage to establish his case by proofs, and in others it will be more advantageous for him to have his case admitted to be true: either course is now equally open to him. The 3rd section of Sir E. Sugden's Act, which allowed a defendant who had absconded, and against whom the bill had been taken pro confesso, or his representatives, to come in and answer the bill at any time within seven years, before which time the decree could not be made absolute, is abrogated by this Order; and it is left to the discretion of the court to make the decree pro confesso in the first instance, or at such time and upon such further notice as, under the circumstances of the case, it may think proper.

It will be observed, that where the absconding party shall have appeared by his own clerk in court, the plaintiff may give notice to the clerk in court that he will move on a certain day, (being not less than fourteen days after the service of such notice), that the bill may be taken pro confesso. This motion it should seem may be made before the sheriff's return of non est inventus, but it must be supported by sufficient evidence to satisfy the court that the defendant ought to be deemed to have absconded. No intimation is given by this Order (as was done by the 8th and 9th Orders of August, 1841) of what will be deemed sufficient evidence to satisfy the court; but it is presumed, that an affidavit will be required of the same description as that prescribed by the first rule of Sir E. Sugden's Act. See Handfield v. Woolley, (4 Sim. 122); Wright v. Green, (2 R. & M. 93); Pugh v. Pugh, (2 M. & K. 358). But where the defendant has had an appearance entered for him, and has not afterwards appeared by his clerk in court, the plaintiff must publish in the London Gazette a notice, that, on a day not less than four weeks from the first insertion of such notice, he will move to take the bill pro confesso. The notice is to be repeated once in every week from the first insertion, up to the time for which the notice is given. The affidavit required in this case will be similar to the one required in the other case; and proof of the due insertion of the notice in the Gazette must be added. In both cases, it is submitted, the certificate of the Six Clerk that the answer has not been filed will be requisite.

Order II.—The practice with respect to infant defendants, in order to compel them to appear or answer, was, it will be remembered, to bring them to the bar of the court, and there to assign them a guardian, to appear and put in their answer. This practice had become, to say the least of it, useless and unmeaning. It was necessary that the infant, of however tender an age, or at however great a distance he might live, should appear (pulling perhaps in his nurse's arms) at the bar of the court, there to have assigned to him a guardian ad litem, who might, as in the case of an appointment of a guardian upon petition, be as well assigned to him in his absence. Under the old practice, the court would dispense with the infant's appearance in the case only of inability through illness to attend, or where he was abroad. (Jongema v. Pfla, 9 Ves. 267; Lushington v. Sewell, 6 Mad. 28; Smith v. Palmer, 3 Beav. 10). This absurdity is removed by the order now under consideration, which provides for the security of the infant defendant; that, upon default made by him in not appearing to or not answering the bill, the court may upon motion order that the senior Six Clerk not towards the cause, may be assigned guardian of such infant defendant, by whom he may appear to and answer, or may answer the bill and defend the suit.

This motion must be supported by proof that the defendant is an infant; and if he has not appeared, that the subpoena was duly served. Six days' notice of the motion must, after the expiration of the time for answering or appearing, be served upon or left at the dwelling-house of the person with whom or under whose care the infant is at the time of service; the master for instance with whom, or the tutor of the college in which, the infant may be residing. The notice must also be served upon or left at the dwelling-house of the father or guardian (if any) of the infant, unless the court shall think fit to dispense with such last-mentioned service. This last requisite is for the better protection of the infant, whose father or guardian is prima facie the proper person to support his interests. But it is easy to imagine cases in which the court might with advantage dispense with the intervention of the father or guardian; for instance, where he is a person of profligate habits, to whose protection the court would not safely assign the protection of the infant's interests; or where, by reason of his absence from the country, he would be unable to watch over them.

Order III.—When a defendant had not caused an appearance to be entered for him by his own Clerk in Court, the plaintiff, if desirous of serving him with any notice requiring personal service, was obliged to obtain a special order for that purpose. This Order does away with that unnecessary expense and delay, and provides that the plaintiff shall, without special leave of the court, be at liberty to serve any notice of motion, or other notice, or any petition, personally or at the dwelling-house or office of any defendant, who, having been served with a subpoena to appear and answer, shall not have caused an appearance to be entered by his Clerk in Court at the proper time.

* See contra, Tappen v. Norman, 11 Ves. 563, where it was said a commission must go.

Order IV.—By this Order is postponed sine die the operation of the first five Orders of August, 1841. The five Orders have been universally condemned, as establishing a method of serving writs, notices, orders, &c. not requiring personal service, which would (we may now say confessedly) have been found, in its practical application, to be inconvenient and cumbersome. They were, it will be remembered, suspended, by an Order of the 19th November, 1841, until the first day of Easter Term, 1842; and, from the further suspension of these we may fairly infer that the system proposed by them had received its death-blow, and, as far as the public are concerned, the old question as to the feasibility of abolishing the present method of service, and establishing a method more simple and not less certain as to its object still remains undecided.

Order V.—This Order is intended to obviate the expense of an application to the court for leave to file a note, under the 21st Order of August, 1841, by which (it will be remembered) the plaintiff was enabled, at the expiration of the time allowed to a defendant to plead, answer, or demur, not demurring alone, to file a traversing note, a copy of which was to be served on the defendant, in the same manner as a subpoena. These requisitions, it is presumed, have been considered adequate to the protection of the defendant. If the plaintiff do not comply with them, the consequence of his miscarriage will fall upon himself, and the expense of an application to the court has accordingly been dispensed with.

Order VI.—This effects certain emendations in the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 47th Orders of August, 1841. The 10th Order had abolished the ancient but cumbersome writ of execution, which was, in the process of enforcing obedience to a decree or order, what the writ of subpoena is in enforcing an appearance or answer. It had also abolished the writ of attachment for the purpose of enforcing obedience to any order or decree. This Order in effect restores to that process the writ of attachment, which in some cases may be a preferable mode of enforcing obedience to an order, inasmuch as it is a less expensive and perhaps a less hostile proceeding than the sending the Serjeant-at-Arms, and may, in a case of no great contumacy, suffice to enforce compliance. It is, therefore, provided by the 11th Order, that if any party, who is by any order or decree ordered to pay money, or to do any act in a limited time, i. e. where the presence of the party is not essential to the performance of the decree, shall, after due service of such order or decree, refuse or neglect to obey the same, the party prosecuting such order or decree shall, at the expiration of the time limited for the performance thereof, be entitled to a writ or writs of attachment against the disobedient party. The writ, it is presumed, will issue as under the old practice, upon affidavit of due service of the order or decree, and of the default in obeying it. The Order goes on to provide, that in case the disobedient party shall be taken or detained in custody under such writ of attachment, without obeying the order or decree, then the party prosecuting the same shall, upon the sheriff's return that he has taken or detained such party*, be entitled to a commission of sequestration in the first instance. But in case the sheriff shall return non est inventus, the party prosecuting the order or decree is left to his option whether he will sue out a commission of sequestration in the first instance, or whether he will have recourse to the Order for the Serjeant-at-Arms, and such other process as he was under the old practice entitled to, upon a return non est inventus made by the commissioners of rebellion, i. e. to a commission of sequestration upon the return of the Serjeant-at-Arms.

The alteration effected by this and the preceding Order is founded, it is presumed, rather upon a tender consideration for the disobedient party, than upon any additional advantage which the party prosecuting might derive from it. The latter, however, has the option of proceeding in that way which he may best prefer; but there are many cases, no doubt, in which he might see a necessity for measures slightly coercive, that would, perhaps, produce immediate compliance with his demand, and in which he would be unwilling to subject the disobedient party to the annoyance which the extreme process would inflict upon him.

The 12th Order of August, 1841, it will be remembered, provided that every Order requiring any party to do any act thereby ordered, should state the time, after service of the Order, within which the act is to be done. This part of the Order is preserved; and the only alteration effected is in the form of the memorandum required to be indorsed upon the copy of the Order which shall be served upon the party required to obey the same, by the insertion of a notice, that, in case he should neglect to obey the Order, he will be liable to be arrested under a writ of attachment, which process, as we have seen, is, under the 11th amended Order, issuable at the option of the party prosecuting the Order.

Order XLVII.—By the 47th Order of August last, a creditor who had come in and established his debt under a decree or order in a suit, was entitled to the costs of so establishing his debt, which costs were to be taxed and added to the debt. The costs of establishing the debt are, in general, simple costs, to fix the amount of which, the expensive machinery of taxation is found to be by no means necessary, and by its application would greatly add to, or in some cases perhaps would double, the amount of the original debt and the costs of establishing it. This Order provides, that the sum to be allowed for such costs shall be fixed by the Master, without taxation, at the time the Master allows the debt of such creditor, unless the Master shall think that it is a proper case for taxation, (for instance, where the bill of costs is too long for immediate settlement, or where it may appear to be full of improper items which ought to be subjected to the condensing process of taxation), in which case the Master is to tax such costs in the regular mode, and the amount is to be added to the debt when established. An exception, it is presumed, must be made to this latter part of the Order, in a case where one-sixth of the bill is taken off, in which case, according to the "regular mode," the costs of taxation will fall on the solicitor. HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, April 26.

Mr. Rodington appeared at the bar with a report from the Committee on the Southampton Election, to the effect that Mr. T. W. Fleming, a member of the House, having been called before the Committee as a witness, had refused to answer certain questions, on the ground that to do so would be on his part a betrayal of confidence reposed in him. He moved that the hon. member be directed to appear before the Committee, and to answer the questions which had been put by the Committee.

Mr. Fleming stated that the questions related to matters confided to him after the election by private friends, for no public object; but he admitted that they had relation to the expenses of the election. He then left the House.

A discussion then ensued, in which the Attorney-General said, that undoubtedly the law was that a witness was not at liberty to refuse to answer a question merely because it related to a matter of private and personal confidence, if it was material to the merits of the case. The Committee was a judicial tribunal, and they had a right to put a question to a witness if they thought it material, and he would not be absolved from the duty of answering by any such considerations as those he had stated.

Mr. O'Connell said, that the witness had not contended that answering the question would tend to criminate him, but merely that he could not, consistently with his feelings as a gentleman, answer them. Those were feelings which in a court of law would not be allowed to protect him from answering material questions. The hon. member alluded to the case of medical practitioners, who are obliged to reveal as witnesses matters coming to their knowledge confidentially in the exercise of their profession.

The House ultimately came to a resolution, that the legal tribunal to decide upon the obligation of a witness to answer questions, is the Select Committee appointed under an act of parliament to try the matter of the petition; and that any objection he has to urge, must be submitted to that Committee, and decided by them.

The hon. member, Mr. Fleming, was then recalled and informed of this resolution by the Speaker.

LONDON, MAY 7, 1842.

ALTHOUGH we scrupulously abstain on all occasions, in pursuance of the general plan on which THE JURIST is based, from the discussion of subjects purely political, yet we conceive that we ought not to refrain from stating and discussing matters of fact, peculiarly, and almost exclusively, within the knowledge and observation of lawyers, although such matters of fact may have a bearing more or less direct on subjects of political difference.

We shall proceed therefore to make some statements on the question of the fiscal duties imposed on the alienations of real property, as compared with those falling on the devolution of personal property. It has been frequently represented, and that in high places, that the State imposes heavy burthens, in the shape of legacy duties, on the devolution of personal property, while it imposes none on the devolution of real property; and although it has been argued, in reply to the inference flowing from the alleged distinction, that real property does bear some fiscal burthens in the shape of stamp duties on alienation, yet the extent of those burthens has been scarcely adverted to, and has been, undoubtedly, much under-rated. The notions generally prevalent on this subject are, indeed, very vague and inaccurate; and we believe that the general impression of unprofessional persons is, that the alienations or other dispositions of real estate, on which stamp duties are imposed, are not of very frequent occurrence, and that in fact those duties form an almost imperceptible charge on land. A little examination will shew, that they form on the contrary a charge of very considerable amount, probably far exceeding the amount of the charge on personal estate arising out of legacy duty. What proportion the amount of the charge raised out of personal property, by way of stamp duty on its devolution, bears to the whole amount of such property, it would probably be very difficult accurately to determine; and it would be equally difficult accurately to determine the precise proportion borne by the amount of stamp duty paid on transfers of real property, to the total amount of such property. We can, however, by reference to general facts, well known to the profession, arrive at something like a fair estimate of the average deduction from the value of landed property, arising out of the impost levied upon it on every entire or partial transfer.

It must be observed, first, that almost every landed estate of any magnitude is re-settled regularly once in every twenty-one years, or thereabouts, on the majority or marriage of the heir in tail. It is further to be observed, that almost every such settlement creates terms, and contains powers to raise portions by mortgaging those terms; and it may fairly be assumed, that, in the great majority of cases, such powers of raising portions are exercised more than once in every thirty years. We have to add to these alienations, all bearing stamp duties, the incessant renewals of leases; the frequent mortgages for raising money required for temporary purposes; and the re-assignments of those mortgages; the not unfrequent alienations for securing annuities, and for raising charges of various kinds; the exchanges; and last, but not least, the frequent, and with reference to lands of small amount, the almost incessant passing of real estates from one hand to another by way of actual sale. On the whole, we believe we shall be under rather than over the mark, if we assume that land is, in some form, the subject of alienation bearing stamp duty, exclusive of leases, once at least in every five years. We have now before us an abstract of title, shewing not less than four alienations subject to stamp duties in one year; in another, we find one alienation in every four years and a half; and in another, four in a little more than four years. And few conveyancers, we will venture to assert, would consider a modern abstract shewing one alienation in three or four years at all an unusual one*. We now come to the question, what is the deduction from the value of land arising out of the stamp duties payable on such alienations? We have shewn, in a former Number of THE JURIST, (ante, p. 109), that, with regard to mortgages for sums between 50*l.* and 500*l.*, the average stamp duty is 1*l.* 5*s.* per cent.; and for sums between 500*l.* and 20,000*l.*, the average stamp duty is 18*s.* per cent. An examination of the ad valorem stamp duties imposed on purchase-deeds will shew, that, on transfers by way of sale, the average stamp duty for sales where the purchase-money is between 20*l.* and 500*l.* is about 1*l.* 6*s.* per cent.; and where the purchase-money is between 1000*l.* and 10,000*l.*, is about 1*l.* 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. Assuming, therefore, that alienations by way of sale or charge take place once in five years, it would appear that, in thirty years, which is about the average duration of a life, land will pay, in the shape of stamp duties, somewhere about 7*l.* per cent. on its value. The legacy duty, on the other hand, can only be payable, speaking not of individual cases, but with reference to averages, once in a life of average duration, that is, it will be payable on the aggregate of personal property once in about thirty years; and as a very large portion of such property, viz. that passing to the widow, pays no duty at all; and a still larger proportion, viz. that passing to children, only pays 1*l.* per cent., while the highest duty of 10*l.* per cent. in the case of strangers, is paid only on a small proportion of the aggregate personal property passing by will; it seems difficult to avoid the conclusion, assuming that we have not over-estimated the frequency of alienation of real estate, that the amount of deduction from the value of such property arising from the charge of stamp duties is equal at least, if it does not exceed, that to which personalty is subject in respect of the legacy duty. In the foregoing observations, it is needless to observe, that we have been necessarily unable to do more than present an approximate statement of the actual charge on the value of real estate depending on the stamp duties payable on its alienation. To pursue the subject with strict and minute investigation, would require data which we believe do not exist at all, and if they did, would lead to an essay somewhat too purely statistical for our pages.

WHEN the present law for the trial of Controverted Elections (4 & 5 Vict. c. 58) came first into operation, we took the liberty of making some observations upon it, with regard, among other things, to the mode of constituting the committees; and we ventured to anticipate that the mode of their constitution was such as to form a body, which although apparently independent of the House, would yet be deficient in those qualities of irresponsibility as regards the tenure of office, and responsibility as regards the possession of bonâ fide judicial functions, which have been usually thought requisite for judicial bodies. (See 5 Jur. 665).

* We are of course aware that, in estimating the frequency of alienation, the result to be collected from abstracts of title is not a certain test, because of course abstracts only shew the alienations of the property that is brought into the market.

The result, if we are to judge by the sentence pronounced on Election Committees by the members of the House itself, has not merely justified, but far outstripped our anticipations. Our readers will have perceived by the Parliamentary debates for some time, that scarcely a week has passed without some honourable member advertg to the inefficacy of the present law to obtain in Election Committees, that which the machinery of the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 58 was intended to produce, a strictly judicial course of proceeding in the investigation of controverted elections; and finally it is proposed, as will be perceived by our Parliamentary Summary in this day's Jurist, to bring in a bill to amend the law generally, and in particular, to substitute the Judges for the Chairman's Panel. There can be no question, that, to preside over a tribunal which is appointed to try legal questions, and which at the same time has every chance of having few if any eminent lawyers in its number, a chairman ought to be obtained, if possible, possessing high legal qualifications. There can be no question also, that, under the present law, there is very small chance of obtaining frequently such chairmen; and the result is, as we see, the existence of judicial bodies, unable to control their bar or their witnesses, throwing themselves constantly for protection and assistance on the superior body from whom in a great measure they hold their authority, and only assisted by that superior body by being told that the authority rests with themselves.

The unseemly struggle which has of late been going on between Election Committees and witnesses, is only one feature of that want of moral force, which, of necessity, must characterise a tribunal so constituted, as not to inspire confidence in its superior knowledge, and in its total irresponsibility to any superior power. An exercise of authority based on the unbounded power of parliament, may terminate that particular struggle, and establish a special rule of the law of evidence in regard to proceedings before Election Committees; but the germ of the struggle is in the practically unjudicial constitution of Election Committees under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 58; and until the law is altered so as to meet that defect, the trials of Election Committees will continue, we apprehend, to be, as they are now, very unsatisfactory.

We shall certainly rejoice to see any measure brought forward, which will have the effect of infusing into the composition of Election Committees some portion of legal learning.

Rebuts.

Judgments as they affect Real Property. By FREDERICK PRIDEAUX, of Lincoln's Inn, Esq., Barrister at Law. [Spettigue.]

We have more than once expressed our dislike to the epitomising style in legal literature; but it must not be understood that we take a general objection to little books. Our objection is limited to that mode of epitomising which consists in bringing a large subject within a small compass, not by condensing, but by omitting. And we do not in the least dislike, on the contrary, we lean strongly towards, books in which a subject itself of moderate compass is expounded with the utmost brevity, not by omitting material information, but by good arrangement, and a careful use of language: of this class, is the very unpretending book now before us; in which the learning upon judgments is collected with admirable precision and clearness. The author first briefly points out what was the law before the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, a portion of the law which is still material, inasmuch as the recent acts relating to judgments have still some cases in which the rights of a judgment-creditor will have to be determined by reference to the old law, particularly as regards the questions between a creditor under certain circumstances, and a purchaser with notice. The author next proceeds to state and discuss the principal provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; and the subsequent acts of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 29, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82. In the former part no novelty could of course be expected, as the subject has been already frequently discussed incidentally in various works. And in the latter the author labours, as all must do who write on new statutes, under the legal difficulty arising from the absence of decided cases. But he has obviously studied the recent statutes with very great care; and his exposition of them is supported by sound legal reasoning.

We find but few points on which we should incline to a different conclusion from that at which he has arrived. There is one, however, in reference to the registration of judgments under the 19th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, on which we think his position somewhat doubtful. The 19th section of that statute enacts, "that no judgment, decree, order, or rule, shall by virtue of that act affect purchasers, unless and until a memorandum or minute containing the name and the usual or last-known place of abode, and the title, trade, or profession of the person whose estate is intended to be affected thereby, and the court and the title of the cause or matter in which the same shall have been obtained or made, and the date thereof, and the account of the debt, damages, costs, or monies thereby recovered or ordered to be paid, shall be left with the senior Master of the Common Pleas at Westminster, who shall forthwith enter the same particulars in a book in alphabetical order, by the name of the person whose estate is intended to be affected by such judgment, decree, order, or rule; and such officer shall be entitled for every such entry to the sum of 5s."

On this Mr. Prideaux observes, that "nothing more is required of the judgment-creditor, than that he shall leave the proper memorandum with the senior Master, and pay the fee. It is not made incumbent on him to see that the officer does in fact make the entry, and the judgment security can in no degree be prejudiced by the officer's neglect." (p. 50). Now, upon the literal construction of the act, it may be observed, that it is questionable whether the words relating to the Master, "who shall forthwith enter the same &c.," are not so connected with the antecedent declaration, as to make them part of the condition on which the judgment is to take effect. And on the equity and general intent of the statute, which is made as well for the protection of purchasers as of judgment creditors, it may seem somewhat unreasonable to suppose that the legislature intended to protect the party guilty of a careless omission, and to leave the injury to be borne by the innocent party. It is to be observed also, that the officer named in the 19th clause is entitled only "for any such entry to the sum of 5s." A payment of the fee, therefore, for an entry not made, would not, we apprehend, be within the statute; and we do not see how such payment would put the judgment-creditor in a better situation than if he simply left the memorandum with the officer. We conclude, on the whole, that it is not quite clear, that merely leaving the memorandum would be sufficient; and that a judgment-creditor, to bring himself within the protection of this clause, would at least be bound to do all in his power to obtain an entry, viz. to deliver the memorandum with a formal demand that an entry should be forthwith made, and to make a formal tender of the fee.

We have also to complain of the very short way in which Mr. Prideaux disposes of the point in Whitworth v. Gaugain, on which he observes, that "this opinion of Lord Cottenham, though extra-judicial, appears to be so perfectly consistent with principle, that there can be little doubt that, if the point should come directly before the court, his view will be supported;" and with a very few more remarks on that most important case, he dismisses it altogether. We should have been glad to see the doctrine of that dictum discussed, with reference to all the learning bearing upon it, by a writer of Mr. Prideaux's acuteness; and, it seems to us, that such an inquiry would have fallen properly within the scope of his work. Subject to this very slight measure of disapprobation, we have nothing to say but what is laudatory of Mr. Prideaux's short essay, which we can safely pronounce a work of very considerable merit and utility.

The Queen has been pleased to confer the honour of Knighthood upon Cresswell Cresswell, Esq., one of the Justices of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The following gentlemen have been appointed Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—John Trenfield, of Chipping Sodbury, Gloucestershire; John Pick Allison, of Thirsk, Yorkshire.

The discipline of the Inns of Court in modern times sits somewhat loosely upon the members, and it might be difficult to ascertain what power of punishment the Benchers possess, except that of expulsion from Commons. It was otherwise in the olden times. From the record of a Parliament holden in the Inner Temple, (says Mr. Addison, History of the Temple, p. 377), on the 15th November, 3 & 4 Philip & Mary, A.D. 1558, it appears that eight gentlemen of the House in the previous reading vocation, "were committed to the Fleet for wilfull demeanure and disobedience to the Bench, and were worthily expulsed the fellowshyppe of the House, since which tyme, upon their humble suite and submission unto the said Benchers of the said House, it is agreed that they shall be re-admitted into the fellowshyppe and into Commons again without paying any fine."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Wednesday, May 3.

Lord Campbell inquired of the Lord Chancellor what progress had been made, and what was intended, with respect to certain law improvements which had been promised in the speech from the Throne. He wished in particular to know what was intended with respect to the Local Courts Bill, and the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill.

The Lord Chancellor said, that with respect to the Lunacy Bill, it had been read a second time, and he intended that it should be committed on Monday (the 9th). The Bankruptcy Bill had been read a first time, and he intended to move the second reading some day next week. As to the Local Courts Bill, it had been prepared some time, but he had so many contradictory and clashing feelings on the subject, that it was not quite ready to be laid on the table. He hoped to bring it in soon after the Whitsuntide recess. And the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill was prepared, and would soon be brought in.

Lord Abinger expressed a hope that the Local Courts Bill would not be brought in at all.

The Lord Chancellor gave notice that on Monday he should move the second reading of the Copyright Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, May 2.

Mr. R. Yorke gave notice of a motion to exempt attorneys and solicitors from the payment of the annual certificate duty.

Mr. O'Connell gave notice of motion for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Act for the trial of Controverted Elections, and to substitute the judges of the superior courts instead of the Chairman's Panel.

Wednesday, May 4.

Mr. Banks moved the order of the day for the second reading of the Special Petty Sessions Bill. The object of the Bill was to diminish the amount of criminal business at assizes, by extending the range and jurisdiction of Petty Sessions. He stated, that the advantages of the measure would be not only a considerable saving of expense, but the saving of many innocent persons from the contamination of being associated with the guilty. Under the present system, great inconvenience arose to the poorer classes, who had often great distances to travel, and to remain for several days in a crowded town for the purpose of prosecuting prisoners who intended from the outset to plead guilty. The hon. member mentioned, that, in Dorsetshire, the average expense of a prosecution was 16*l.*, and there were generally as many as sixty prisoners to be prosecuted.

Sir J. Graham objected to the principle of the Bill, which he said would make the proceedings depend, not on the nature of the offence, but on the accident of the prisoner intending to plead guilty; and the trials would take place in the absence of a sufficient bar or of legal advisers.

The Bill was ordered to be read that day six months.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PRACTICE OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

To Attorneys and Solicitors.

55, Chancery-lane, 9th April, 1842.

FOR the convenience of persons in the Western and Central Districts of London, and particularly of Gentlemen connected with the Law, THE LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY have opened a Branch Office at 55, Chancery-lane, where Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information connected with the business of the Company, may be procured; and where Examinations of Parties whose Lives are proposed for Assurance may be taken, and Policies effected, as at the Chief Office of the Company, in Charlotte-row, Mansion-house.

Your attention is solicited to some of the distinguishing features of this Company, which have been introduced after mature deliberation, and which will be most conveniently pointed out by referring to Policies, as Money Transaction and Family Provision Policies.

MONEY TRANSACTION POLICIES.—Your professional experience and acquaintance with the records of the Courts of Law and Equity, must have convinced you that considerable changes were required in the practice and rules of Life Offices, to render this class of Policies valid and unimpeachable documents of security, which no unforeseen circumstances or future accidents could invalidate. This Company has endeavored, and they think successfully, to render their Policies as indefeasible and negotiable securities as is possible, consistently with a due regard to the safety of the contracting parties; and to effect this object the Company has introduced the following clause into their Deed of Settlement:—

CLAUSE 18.—“That every Policy issued by the Company shall be indefeasible and indisputable, and the fact of the issuing of the same shall be conclusive evidence of its validity; and it shall not be lawful for the Company to delay payment of the money awarded thereby, on the ground of any error, mistake or omission, however important, made by or on the part of the person or persons effecting the same; and that, on the contrary, the amount receivable under the same shall be paid at the time stipulated by the Policy, to the person entitled thereto, as if no such error, mistake or omission had been made or discovered, unless the Policy shall have been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.”

FAMILY PROVISION POLICIES.—In the well-founded belief that Life Assurance business is profitable, persons making provisions for their families, and contemplating a long duration of time between the date of the Policy and the claim to arise under it, generally prefer Assurances which may carry with them a right to participate in the profits to be realized by the Company during the currency of their Policies. By the Deed of Constitution of this Company, the participating Assured are entitled to the WHOLE OF THE MUTUAL PROFITS, as if they had been Assured in a purely Mutual Society; and they have, at the same time, the security not only of the Funds of the Company, arising from the accumulated premiums, but also the proprietary funds and subscribed Capital of the Company. To the Shareholders are allotted only those profits which are realised by the investment of their own paid capital, and from the excess of the premiums derived from the Non-participating Assurances. This mode of Division of Profits is peculiar to this Company.

In order to provide against the defeat of a Policy in the hands of a CREDITOR, by the DEBTOR, whose Life is Assured leaving the country, and going beyond the prescribed limits, the Company grant WHOLE WORLD POLICES, whereby, on condition of receiving an extra premium, varying in amount according to the circumstances of the case, but fixed and determined at the time of issuing the Policy, the debtor, on whose Life an Assurance has been effected, is entitled to go to or reside in any part of the world, without invalidating the Assurance.

To enable a party to effect an Assurance at the LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, and to entitle him to discontinue it at a less notice than by any other plan, a seven years' Half-premium system has been introduced; and, upon comparing the following scale with any other which has been devised for reducing present payments, it will be seen how much more economically a long transaction can be fortified by this kind of Policy than by any other. The Half-premium system possesses a further advantage over temporary Assurances, or those for a Term of Years, from the Assured having the option of continuing for Life the Policy which he may have procured for a mere temporary purpose.

THE COMMISSION allowed to Attorneys is 10l. per cent. upon the first, and 5l. per cent. upon all future premiums; and the Commission continues to be payable to the Attorney, who completed the Assurance with the Company, although the future premiums may be paid by others.

The usual weekly Board day is Thursday, but Policies may be obtained any day betwixt the hours of 10 and 5.

LONDON, MAY 14, 1842.

It must ever be desirable, that, in such a judicial system as that of England, admitting of courts of different jurisdiction, the boundaries which separate the jurisdictions of such courts should be as clearly marked as possible; but the extension of jurisdiction which the increased wants of a complicated state of civilization tend to produce in each court, is necessarily sometimes accompanied by an approximation more or less close to the originally exclusive jurisdiction of some other court, and occasionally the result is so close a similarity of interference or relief as to generate actual concurrence of jurisdiction.

This process has for the last half century been to a considerable extent going on between Courts of Law and Courts of Equity, principally, however, by the adoption on the part of Courts of Law of equitable doctrines; and because originally the jurisdiction of Equity has been partly founded on the inadequacy of the relief obtainable in certain cases at law, it seems to have been sometimes thought, that when Courts of Law have under judicial or under legislative guidance, assumed jurisdiction in cases in which before relief was only to be had in Equity, the Courts of Equity are ousted not only of their exclusive jurisdiction, but of all concurrent jurisdiction.

How far this doctrine may be sound, if considered solely with reference to the basis of the original jurisdiction of Equity, we shall not now pause to inquire; but it does not seem to be capable of being supported upon authority or practice. The dicta of Lord Eldon on the subject, in Eyre v. Everett, (2 Russ. 382), and Kemp v. Pryor, (7 Ves. 249), are well known; and it is clear from those dicta, that that eminent judge, whose indecision, though it detracted from the usefulness, cannot affect the undoubted fact of his profound learning, had no such idea as that a Court of Law, simply by assuming a new jurisdiction, would oust the antecedently existing jurisdiction of Equity. But it has been said, that in some late cases, (Gordon v. Calvert, 4 Russ. 581; Hodgson v. Murray, 3 Sim. 283; and Simpson v. Lord Howden, 3 My. & C. 97), Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Cottenham have much shaken, if not positively contradicted, Lord Eldon's opinion. These cases therefore require a particular examination.

In Simpson v. Lord Howden, the question was as to the jurisdiction of the Court to relieve against an instrument, which, if bad at all at law, was bad upon the face of it, and not by reason of extrinsic facts; and Lord Cottenham decided the case, not upon the ground that any pre-existing jurisdiction of Equity was ousted by a subsequently assumed jurisdiction of the Courts of Common Law, but upon the ground, that the jurisdiction contended for never had been exercised by a Court of Equity; for, after analysing all the cases, and shewing that, upon authority, the jurisdiction had not only never been exercised, but that, in Colman v. Sarrel, (1 Ves. 50), and Gray v. Mathias, (5 Ves. 286), it had been expressly denied, he proceeded thus:—

“If, then, there be no case in which this jurisdiction has been exercised, and if I find Lord Thurlow, in the case referred to in Colman v. Sarrel, and the Court of Exchequer, in Gray v. Mathias, deciding against it; Lord Alvanley, in Bromley v. Holland, regretting that the jurisdiction had been assumed in the cases of annuities; and Lord Eldon, in the same case directly, and in Ware v. Horwood inferentially, disclaiming the jurisdiction contended for—it only remains to be considered, whether any such cogent reason exists in the present case, as to make it my duty to assume the jurisdiction, and so, for the first time, to establish a precedent for it.”

In Hodgson v. Murray, which, as reported in 2 Sim. 515, arose on a bill filed for re-delivery of a promissory note overdue, and for an injunction to stay proceedings at law, although it was admitted that a good defence might be made at law, yet the Vice-Chancellor held that no ground for ousting the jurisdiction of Equity.

Lord Lyndhurst, it is true, discharged the order made by the Vice-Chancellor in this case, on the ground that, if the facts alleged were true, the equities disclosed would furnish a clear defence in a Court of Law, in which the question could be tried in a much more satisfactory manner. That decision of his Lordship did not, as it appears to us, deny the jurisdiction of Equity, but only went to say, that in that particular case it was not convenient to exercise it, and that on the ground, not that the remedy at law would be the same, but that it would be better. The decision of Lord Lyndhurst did not therefore touch at all the question whether Equity had lost any of its original jurisdiction; nor has the case of Gordon v. Calvert any application to that point, as the question in that case was not so much whether Equity had or had not lost jurisdiction, as whether the conduct of the defendant was such as to give the plaintiff an equity to restrain him from urging his legal rights.

On the other hand, there are many cases in which the existence of a concurrent jurisdiction generally is fully recognised, and some in which the very point under discussion arises. In Adamson v. Evitt, (2 Russ. & My. 86), the grantee of an annuity was induced, by false representations by the grantor's agent, to become the purchaser of an annuity; and there it was admitted that the plaintiff could have sustained an action for damages in the nature of an action of deceit against the defendant. But the Court said—"This Court nevertheless, with respect to the fraud, would have a concurrent jurisdiction with a Court of Law."

Again, in the cases on arbitration: if a reference is made a rule of a Court of Law, not under the statute 9 & 10 Will. 3, although a complete remedy against the award by setting it aside may be obtained by a proper application to the Court of Law, yet Equity has also jurisdiction to set aside the award. (Brown v. Brown, 1 Vern. 157, before the statute; and Lord Lonsdale v. Littledale, 2 Ves. 451, since the statute). The jurisdiction of Equity, where an agreement out of Court to refer is made a rule of a Court of Law under the statute, is ousted, it is true; but that is by the express words of the statute itself, and not simpliciter, on the ground of the Court of Law having assumed jurisdiction. (Nicholls v. Chalie, 14 Ves. 285; Gwinett v. Bannister, Id. 530; and see in particular Nicholls v. Roe, 3 Myl. & K. 431).

Another strong case to shew that the existence of jurisdiction in another Court does not oust that of Equity, is Duncan v. Macalmont, (5 Jur. 262), which was upon a bottomry bond alleged to be fraudulent; and it was admitted that full relief could be obtained in the Court of Admiralty by a proper suit. Yet Lord Langdale, M. R., held that Equity had jurisdiction, because it could more conveniently sift the matter than could be done under the particular form of proceeding then adopted in the Admiralty Court.

Again, another class of cases bearing on this subject is that in which Equity asserts, not merely concurrent but exclusive jurisdiction to give a remedy against its own officers to parties injuriously affected by the act of those officers. (Aston v. Heron, 2 M. & K. 290, and the cases there collected). In several of those cases, where an action had been brought against the officer of the Court for damages, the Court of Chancery, in restraining the action, has referred it to the Master to ascertain what damages the plaintiff at law ought to receive. There is no pretence in such cases for saying that Equity interferes to remedy any defect in the administration of justice by the Court of Law; since it gives precisely the same remedy by its own order that the Court of Common Law would give, and no more.

But the most conclusive instances in support of the doctrine that we are contending for, are the cases under the Interpleader Act, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 58. That act reciting that it often happens that a person sued at law for the recovery of money or goods wherein he has no interest, and which are also claimed of him by some third party, has no means of relieving himself from such adverse claim, but by a suit in Equity against the plaintiff and such third party, usually called a bill of interpleader, which is attended with expense and delay, for remedy thereof, proceeds to give power to Courts of Common Law, upon application by a defendant in an action of assumpsit, debt, detinue, or trover, stating that the right is in a third party, to order such party to appear and maintain or relinquish his claim, and in the meantime to stay the proceedings in such action.

It is plain from the recital, that the statute is expressly intended to give relief in those very cases where before relief could be only had in Equity; and if therefore the mere fact of Courts of Law acquiring a jurisdiction formerly exercised by Equity, were sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of Equity, this is precisely the case for the application of that doctrine. Yet, although, as observed by Mr. Chitty, (Practice of the Law, vol. 2, p. 343), the statute makes a considerable inroad on the prior exclusive jurisdiction of a Court of Equity, it has never been contended for one moment that it abrogates it. On the contrary, there have been in Equity since that statute, several cases of interpleader in which the jurisdiction has been exercised without question; (Simking v. Behrens, 2 My. & C. 581; Paule v. Von Melle, 8 Sim. 327); and it has never occurred either to the Court or the counsel, to conceive that the effect of the 1 & 2 Will. 4 is to oust such jurisdiction, or to establish anything more than a concurrent jurisdiction in Courts of Law.

With regard to the principle upon which the jurisdiction of Equity is founded, it is said, that equitable jurisdiction is essentially founded on the assumption of there being some defect in the administration of justice in other Courts. Undoubtedly that is, in fact, the origin, and it is so stated by Lord Redesdale, of the extraordinary jurisdiction of Equity; and the doctrine is still so far sustained, that, at this day there can be no doubt that a Court of Equity would assume a new head of jurisdiction on any subject on which it should appear that a Court of Law would be incapable of doing full justice. But it does not at all follow that the jurisdiction so assumed, should cease by reason of the Court, which, in the origin, could not do justice, assuming some new forms of proceeding enabling it to do so. For the existence of jurisdiction is as firmly based upon the fact of its having been for a long period exercised, as upon its accordance with any real or supposed principle. In other words, jurisdiction rests in many cases upon practice; and if we find that a jurisdiction has been constantly, and from a remote period, exercised, it is not necessary, we apprehend, to inquire what is the reason or principle of it. It is sufficient, that it has been exercised for a long time without challenge, for it to have acquired a legal and indefeasible existence.

Besides, the whole foundation of the doctrine that the jurisdiction of Equity is ousted by the assumption of a concurrent jurisdiction by a Court of Law falls, when we consider that such ouster of jurisdiction can only be contended for on the assumption that the relief obtainable at Law is precisely similar to, or at least for all purposes as complete as, that obtainable in Equity, an assumption which never can be strictly and completely true, so long as the modes of procedure in Equity and at Law remain, as they now are, totally dissimilar; since it is obvious, that though the same legal effect may result, in a case of concurrent jurisdiction, from a judgment at Law as from a decree in Equity, yet the practical effect on the parties may be much modified by the mode of procedure through which the legal effect is to be obtained.

A Treatise on Simple Contracts, and the Action of Assumpsit. By WILLIAM FOX, Esq., of the Inner Temple, Special Pleader. [Stevens & Norton, 1842.]

The author of the above work ventures in his advertisement to hope that it will prove a useful compendium for practical purposes, but we doubt whether he has not confined himself within too narrow limits to entitle his book to that distinction; for they have obliged him to treat his subject in so general a manner, that the practitioner cannot safely rely on his statement of the law, and must consult other text books. As far, indeed, as he has gone, the law is, with the exception of some trifling inaccuracies, correctly stated; but when we tell our readers that the law relating to the common count on the sale of goods occupies only four pages of a duodecimo volume, far from closely printed, and that relating to the count for use and occupation barely two, they may judge for themselves how the subject must be discussed. In fact, the book will be most useful to those whom the sight of a larger work would frighten from its perusal, and who may in our author's pages find a good outline of a very useful branch of the law. To them and to the student we may safely recommend it, as it is written in an easy, intelligible style; and the subject is divided and arranged in such a manner as to facilitate the task of the reader. The following extract from the history of the action of assumpsit, will convey an idea of the author's manner:—

"Previously to the statute of Westminster 2, 13 Ed. 1, the actions of case, assumpsit, and trover, did not exist; and whenever circumstances arose which would now be the subject of those actions, the suitor was without a remedy, unless, indeed, he could find one in Chancery. The clerks who had the framing of writs were too much attached to ancient precedents, says Sir William Blackstone; and unless the case for which the writ was sought fell exactly within the scope of those which already existed, the fear of innovation prevented them from framing a new one. (3 Bl. Com. 51; 2 Reeves, 202.)

"To quicken their diligence, says the learned judge, the 24th section of the above statute was framed, which enacted, that whenever in one case a writ should be found, and in a like case (consimili casu) falling under the same right, and requiring a like remedy, no precedent could be produced, the clerks should agree in framing a new one; and if they would not agree, it was to be referred to parliament.

"The provision was soon taken advantage of, and actions, unheard of before, abounded in the courts. A ferryman overloaded his boat whereby it upset, and the plaintiff's horse was drowned; it was held that an action lay. Sheriffs were sued for illegally quashing the essoin, for making a false return, for directing a wrong officer to summon a panel; actions for deceit and slander, for professional negligence, for loss of goods by a bailee, for illegally taking toll, and a variety of others were successfully maintained. (3 Reeves, 89 to 93; Id. 243).

"These were all actions of trespass on the case; or as it was styled in the Latin of the courts of law, transgressio super casum. Much discussion arose as to what was their real nature; and as they were all founded on an extension of the writ of trespass, it was settled that the new action of trespass on the case only applied to such injuries as were 'quasi trespasses.' (3 Reeves, 243).

"All the early cases of assumpsit reported, appear to have been special actions. (3 Reeves, 396). When the common indebitatus counts were first used, does not appear to have been well ascertained. It is said by Mr. Serjeant Williams, that there were no such counts in the time of Charles II. (2 Wms. Saund. 350, 374). No doubt they were not then in use; but Mr. Reeves adduces two instances very like common counts, reported in the 33 Hen. 8, New Cases 5. And he says, that when, in a subsequent reign, the validity of such counts was much discussed, many records of that earlier period were produced to shew that it was no new device. (4 Reeves, 383). Holt, C. J., is reported to have said, that he was a bold man who first ventured on them, (2 Wms. Saund. 374); perhaps, in the present day, he would be thought timid who could see any thing to fear in so harmless a simplification of a common form."

We had noted down a few inaccuracies; but we refrain from mentioning more than one. At page 17 our author, in attempting to define the limitation to the rule which makes a party sharing the profits of a trade a partner in it, states it to be, that if he is to have a share of the profits and something more, he is not constituted a partner thereby. We apprehend this is not the effect of the cases which he cites; and, indeed, it is difficult to understand how the addition of something more to a share of the profits can prevent the latter from creating a partnership. There is no case which decides that if a party had a third or other share of the profits and an annual allowance besides, on account of his devoting more attention or skill to the business than the other members of the firm, he would not be a partner. The author would have done better if he had merely stated the decisions on the subject, without attempting to deduce any rule from them. Having found fault with him in this instance, we must do him the justice to remark, that he has very properly, in his observations on moral considerations supporting a promise, called attention to the effect which the decision in Eastwood v. Kenyon, (11 A. & E. 438), may have upon the cases in which seduction and past cohabitation have been considered sufficient to support an express promise. In that case, the court, in an elaborate judgment, after reviewing all the previous cases on the subject, decided, that a pecuniary benefit, conferred by the plaintiff and accepted by the defendant, was not such a consideration as would support a subsequent express promise by the defendant to reimburse the plaintiff; and they said that the conclusion arrived at in Winnall v. Adney (3 B. & P. 249) seemed to be correct in general, "that an express promise can only revive a precedent good consideration, which might have been enforced at law through the medium of an implied promise, had it not been suspended by some positive rule of law, but can give no original cause of action, if the obligation on which it is founded never could have been enforced at law, though not barred by any legal maxim or statute provision." It would seem, therefore, that the case of Gibson v. Dickie, (3 M. & S. 433), where a declaration, stating a promise in consideration of past cohabitation, was held good, would not now be considered as an authority. This judgment, however, does not at all affect those cases in which the money is secured by a deed or bond, as there no consideration is necessary, and that of past cohabitation not being illegal, an instrument under seal would be valid.

A Synopsis of the Law relating to Indictable Offences.
By B. BOOTHBY, Esq. [Saunders & Benning.]

There are already so many able works on Criminal Law, that the appearance of a new one excited our surprise, and disposed us to examine narrowly into its claims to the attention of the profession. With this view we looked at the preface to learn what the author could say in vindication of himself. Our readers shall hear his own words:—

"The following pages are presented to the profession with a full consciousness of there being already several most able and valuable works relating to the Criminal Law, which have most deservedly obtained their confidence and approbation; and that this fact calls for some explanation, why any further work should be submitted to their attention. The peculiar arrangement of this work is alone relied upon, to supply such explanation, as affording it is hoped greater facilities for reference to the various offences, and the points of law arising under each, than have been supplied by any previous volume: the combination of the alphabetical and tabular arrangements, serving to direct the eye at once to the subject of which it is in search. The limited object of this compilation also tends to distinguish it from other works; as not including any treatise on pleading, evidence, and practice generally, but only such matter in connexion with these subjects as the decided cases, and the doctrines of text-writers, noticed under each offence, may embrace, and as it may be useful to remind the practitioner of, in the course of actual business; directing at the same time to the sources of more elaborate information."

The arrangement thus spoken of consists in dividing the book into four columns, in the first of which the crimes are placed in alphabetical order, whilst in the second we have the punishment stated, in the third the requisite evidence, and in the fourth "a condensed digest of cases," so that the reader may at a glance inform himself of everything relating to any particular offence; and the column of punishments is especially useful where alterations have been made by recent statutes. References are added to precedents of indictments, and to other works on criminal pleading and evidence. As the merits of the arrangement cannot be judged of except by an examination of the book itself, we shall only present to our readers one example of the author's observations. In a note to the 13th section of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, which relates to breaking and entering a building within the curtilage and stealing therein, he observes, that "It would seem to have been the intention of the legislature, to provide by this section for the protection of all such buildings occupied with a dwelling-house, as are excluded, by the previous section 13, from the definition of a dwelling-house in burglary, house-breaking, and stealing in a dwelling-house to the value of 5l.; but as it is specifically said that a building, in order to come within sect. 14, must be 'within the curtilage of a dwelling-house,' as well as 'occupied

'therewith,' it may be doubted whether, in cases similar to the following, the building broken could be held to be a building within the curtilage. The proprietor, a farmer, had a dwelling-house in which he lived, a stable, a cottage, a cow-house, and barn, in one range of buildings, in the order mentioned, and under one roof, but they were not inclosed by a yard or wall, and had no internal communication. The offence was committed in the barn, and the judge held this to be a burglary; for the barn which was under the same roof, was parcel of and enjoyed with the dwelling-house. In this case, as the building broken had no communication between such building and dwelling-house, either immediate, or by means of a covered and inclosed passage, leading from one to the other, it is apprehended that it was not such a building as could be deemed to be part of a dwelling-house, since the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 13; and on the other hand, there seems to be a difficulty in deciding that the breaking of such a building would fall under the 14th section; for although occupied with a dwelling-house, can it be said to be 'a building within the curtilage of a dwelling-house?'"

We need only add, that, as far as our perusal has enabled us to form an opinion, the author has ably and carefully executed his task; and we may safely predict that his book will be found a very useful companion in a criminal court.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

A Bill to amend the Law relating to Double Costs, Notices of Action, Limitations of Actions, and Pleas of the General Issue, under certain Acts of Parliament.

- Sect. 1. Repeal of Provision in Local and Personal Acts giving Double and Treble Costs.
2. Repealing Provision in Public Acts giving Double and Treble Costs.
3. Repeal of Provision in Local and Personal Acts allowing General Issue to be pleaded.
4. Uniformity of Notice of Action.
5. General Limitation of Actions under Local and Personal Acts.
6. Act not to extend to Actions &c. brought before passing of the Act.

Whereas divers acts of parliament, public, local, and personal, contain enactments or provisions relating to the recovery of double, treble, or other costs, in certain cases, and to the pleading of the general issue, and the giving any special matter in evidence at any trial to be had for any matter done in pursuance of or under the authority of the said acts, and to the giving of notice of action before any action shall be commenced; And whereas it is expedient that the law should be altered in such respects: be it therefore enacted &c., That so much of any clause, enactment, or provision in any act or acts commonly called public, local, and personal, or local and personal, or in any act or acts of a local or personal nature, whereby it is enacted or provided, that either double or treble costs or any other than the usual costs between party and party shall or may be recovered, shall be and the same are hereby repealed: Provided always, That in lieu thereof, the usual costs between party and party shall and may be recovered, and no more.

2. That so much of any clause, enactment, or provision in any public act or acts, not local or personal, whereby it is enacted or provided, that either double or treble costs or any other than the usual costs between party and party shall or may be recovered, shall be and the same are hereby repealed: Provided always, That instead of such costs, the party or parties heretofore entitled under such last-mentioned acts to such double, treble, or other costs, shall receive such full and reasonable indemnity as to all costs, charges, and expenses incurred in and about any action, suit, or other legal proceeding, as shall be taxed by the proper officer in that behalf, subject to be reviewed in like manner and by the same authority as any other taxation of costs by such officer.

3. That so much of any clause or provision in any act or acts commonly called public, local, and personal, or local and per-usual, or in any act or acts of a local and personal nature, whereby any party or parties are entitled or permitted to plead the general issue only, and to give any special matter in evidence without specially pleading the same, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

4. And whereas it is expedient that the law should be uniform with respect to notice of action in all cases where such notice of action is required; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this act, in all cases where notice of action is required, such notice shall be given — at least before any action shall be commenced; and such notice of action shall be sufficient, any act or acts to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

5. And whereas divers acts, commonly called public, local, and personal, or local and personal acts, and divers other acts of a local and personal nature, contain clauses limiting the time within which actions may be brought for anything done in pursuance of the said acts respectively: And whereas the periods of such limitations vary very much, and it is expedient that there should be one period of limitation only; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this act, the period within which any action may be brought for anything done under the authority or in pursuance of any such act or acts, shall be — years, or in case of continuing damage, then within — years after such damage shall have ceased; and that so much of any clause, provision, or enactment by which any other time or period of limitation is appointed or enacted, shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

6. That nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any action, bill, plaint, or information, or any legal proceeding of any kind whatsoever, commenced before the passing of this act; but such proceedings may be thereupon had and taken, in all respects as if this act had not passed.

LONDON, MAY 21, 1842.

THE proceedings of the Southampton Election Committee have suggested to us, that a few observations on the inquiry how far a witness is bound to answer the questions put to him, might not be unacceptable to our readers. The first rule is well settled, and is stated by Mr. Starkie to be, that "he is not bound to answer any question, either in a court of law or of equity, if his answer will expose him to any criminal punishment or penal liability." This proceeds from the wise and humane principle of the English Law, that no man shall be obliged to criminate himself; and, accordingly, the privilege of objecting belongs only to the witness, and the counsel of a party in the cause is not allowed to argue it. The above foundation of the rule distinguishes it from another which relates to questions tending to degrade a witness, but not subjecting him to any penalty or forfeiture of estate; and the objection to which rests upon other grounds. It is obvious, that the reason why a witness is not obliged to answer is, that the admissions thus forcibly extorted might afterwards be used against him. Acts of Parliament have, on several occasions, been passed to protect witnesses from the consequences of giving evidence: the 45 Geo. 3, c. 126, and 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 21, were of this nature. And a bill of like character, in order to facilitate inquiries into bribery at elections, was a short time since brought into the House of Lords by Lord Brougham. In these cases it does not appear to have been thought that the witness might still refuse to answer, on the ground of its tending to degrade him; for, although the Act protected him from punishment, his character would be as much injured by an avowal of the crime as if no protection existed. What, then, is the cause of this apparent omission? We apprehend it to be, that, where a question is put relevant to the matter in issue, the witness must give an answer, however strongly it may reflect on his character. The question, in such cases, is not put for the purpose of reflecting on the character of the witness, although that may be its necessary effect, but of ascertaining the truth concerning the point in issue; and the law will not suffer any regard for the character merely of a witness, to prevent its doing justice to the litigant parties. But where the answer may create a criminal liability, it is deemed better that there should be a failure of justice, than that any man should be forced into a confession of guilt. Where, therefore, an act of indemnity has been passed, the witness will be obliged to answer all questions relevant to the inquiry, but not any which are irrelevant and put only for the purpose of discrediting him.

As to the nature of the questions which he may refuse to answer, it is to be observed, that not only a question that directly crimines is objectionable, but even one having a tendency to do so. For instance, where there was a question whether there had been usury in a bill of exchange, and the witness being asked if the bill had ever been in his possession before, objected; Mansfield C. J., refused to compel him to answer, observing that it went to connect him with the bill, and might be a link in the chain; and Lord Eldon on one occasion expressed his opinion, that a party should be protected from questions not only that have a direct tendency to criminate him, but that form one step towards it. And it is important to the witness that he should at once object, and not wait for a question directly tending to criminate him to be put; for he may find, that by allowing the preliminary questions to be put without objection, he has inadvertently parted with his privilege, and can no longer refuse to answer.

Whether a witness is to be driven to insist upon his right, by allowing the question to be asked, is not yet clearly settled, and yet to him this is a very important matter. In vain have several judges said, "that the not answering can have no effect with the jury, and that no inference was to be drawn from the refusal." It is impossible for a jury not to entertain an unfavourable opinion of such a witness; for what innocent man would not indignantly deny the charge and strive to clear his character from suspicion, instead of sheltering himself behind his strict legal right? and, indeed, one judge has viewed the subject in this light, and remarked, that "if the witness refuse to answer, it is not without its effect on the jury. If you ask a witness whether he has committed a particular crime, it would perhaps be going too far to say that you may discredit him if he refuse to answer: it is for the jury to draw what inferences they may." Nor is it upon the jury only that an unfavourable effect would be produced: the refusing to answer would be deemed by the bystanders a conclusive proof of guilt, and the character of the witness receive an indelible stain. Where, however, the fact inquired into, although it contain a criminal imputation against the witness, is connected with the matter in issue, the question must be asked; for it was held by all the judges in The Queen's case, (2 B. & B. 311), not only that a question as to an act done by the witness, the answer to which might criminate him, might be put, in order to afford a foundation for contradicting him if he denied the fact, but even that the adverse party could not, without asking the question, adduce such evidence to impeach the credit of the witness. It is therefore in those cases only in which the subject of the question is unconnected with the point in issue—and the party asking it must be satisfied with the answer if given, and cannot produce evidence in contradiction on account of its being a collateral issue—that the doubt, whether the question may be put, arises. There have been several contradictory decisions. In Reading's case, (7 Howell's St. Tr. 226), it was held that a question tending to charge a witness with a crime for which he had been pardoned, could not be asked; and in Cundell v. Pratt, 1 Moo. & Mal. 108), on a witness being asked upon cross-examination, whether she had been guilty of incest with a particular individual, Best, C. J., interfered, and prohibited the question, saying, "This question may subject her to punishment; I think, therefore, it ought not to be put." And in Watson's case, (2 Stark. N. P. C. 161), Lord Ellenborough observed, that a question whether a witness had been guilty of a particular crime, would be improperly asked. Authorities are not wanting on the other side. Bayley, J., in the same case, appears to have thought that such questions might be put. In Mr. Roscoe's excellent book on Criminal Evidence, 2nd Ed. 163), it is remarked in reference to this subject, that "upon principle, it would seem that questions tending to expose the witness to punishment, may be put as well as questions tending to degrade his character. The ground of objection in the first case is not that the question has a tendency to degrade him, but that advantage may be taken of his answer in some future proceeding against him, and the rule that no person is bound to accuse himself is urged. This objection is, however, completely removed by permitting the witness not to answer the question, for this silence would not in any future proceeding be any admission of guilt. The question may then be regarded as one simply tending to degrade the witness, and would come within the rule which appears to be now well established, that it may be put, though the witness is not compellable to answer." And an observation of Mr. Phillips respecting questions tending to degrade, is equally applicable to questions tending to criminate—that it is difficult to see how a question can properly be deemed illegal, when, if the witness chooses to answer, his answer must undoubtedly be received as evidence. (Phil. Ev. 8th ed. 922). To this it may be added, that, in order to decide upon the value of any testimony, it is necessary to know the character of the person giving it; and the injury done to the feelings of a guilty witness is not to be compared with the evil of an imperfect administration of justice. But amidst this conflict of authorities, we will not presume to decide. A clause declaratory of the law on the subject, might perhaps be usefully inserted in the Bill now in progress for amending the Law of Evidence. And it may even be worthy of consideration, whether the law might not be altered so as to protect a witness in all cases from being affected by answers given in judicial proceedings, and thus compel a disclosure of the whole truth. It might appear inquisitorial, but would not be so in reality; and, we dare say, many of our readers have known an important investigation to be baffled by this right of refusing to answer.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

A Bill to empower Coroners to take Bail in Cases of Manslaughter.

- Sect. 1. Coroners may take Bail in Cases of Manslaughter.
2. Coroner to deliver Recognizances to proper Officer.
3. In Cases of Refusal by Coroner to take Bail.
4. Act not to extend to Scotland.
5. Act may be altered during present Session.

Whereas it is expedient and would promote the ends of public justice to authorize county and all other coroners to take bail for the appearance of persons who may stand charged with the crime of manslaughter before such coroners; be it therefore enacted, by &c., That from and after the passing of this act, whenever, upon the holding of any coroner's inquest, the jury duly sworn at such inquest shall have returned and recorded a verdict of manslaughter against any person or persons therein named, it shall be lawful for the coroner before whom such inquest has been held to admit, if he shall think fit, and hold to bail the person or persons so charged with being guilty of the said manslaughter, or the person or persons against whom any warrant of apprehension or commitment shall have been issued, signed by the said coroner, in consequence of the said verdict of manslaughter, in such sum or sums of money, and with such sureties, as he the said coroner shall think fit to name and require.

2. That the said coroner shall deliver or cause to be delivered the recognizance of such bail to the proper officer for receiving the same, in the court or courts wherein the trial or trials of the said person or persons is or are to take place, together with the written depositions of the witnesses at the said coroner's inquest, and the inquisition which was taken and signed thereat, before or at the time of the opening of the said court or courts.

3. That any person or persons against whom a verdict or verdicts of manslaughter has or have been returned and recorded as aforesaid, shall, in case of the refusal of any coroner to take bail as aforesaid, have the same powers and remedies, by application to any of the judges of Her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench, as are now in force.

4. That the provisions of this act shall not extend to Scotland.

5. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this present session of parliament.

MIDDLE TEMPLE, May 6.—Called to the degree of the Utter Bar, William Adair Bruce, Esq.; Harvey Berrow Hooper, Esq.; Henry Stevens, Esq.; Samuel Darbishire, Esq.; Henry Keyser, Esq.; John Cole, Esq.

LONDON, MAY 28, 1842.

A CASE will be found reported in a preceding number of THE JURIST, (Evans v. Brown, ante, p. 380), in which the Master of the Rolls has determined, that, upon the construction of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, (having regard also to the antecedent statutes 1 Will. 4, c. 47, and 3 Will. & M. c. 14), where a party dies seised of real estate without heirs, and the land escheats to the lord, the lord taking by escheat takes the land subject to the debts of the party so dying seised without heirs.

According to the report of the case, the Court does not appear to have entered into the technical doctrines of the law respecting escheat, especially as regards lands of copyhold tenure; but it seems to have put the decision almost entirely on the words of the late stat. 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104.

It must be admitted, that the construction put by Lord Langdale on the statute, is the one most consistent with modern notions of justice and honesty. For if it be but honest that when a party seised of real estate dies in debt, his heir, who not only has generally the strong claim of blood upon him, but has most frequently been brought up in some reliance upon his succession as a means of subsistence, should be deprived of that succession, rather than that the claims of creditors should be defeated; a fortiori, is it just that the lord, who is a mere stranger, who has no connection whatever with the debtor, and who, as the escheat is a mere accident, never can or does count upon it in any possible degree as property, should yield to the creditor.

We cannot, at the same time, refrain from thinking that it is difficult to reconcile the decision in Evans v. Brown with the technical rules of the law, and the authorities bearing upon the nature of escheats.

In the case before Lord Langdale, it does not appear clearly of what tenure the estates were in respect of which the question arose. It is to be presumed they were copy-hold, or customary freehold, as the decree in the original cause, in which it was assumed that the land was freehold, appears to have assumed also that the reversion was in the Crown discharged of the debts of the party who had died seised. And the question arose in the supplemental suit in which his Lordship's opinion was given, on account of a claim set up by a party claiming title by escheat as to parts of the land, as the lord of certain manors under which those parts were held. We must, therefore, we conclude, take his Lordship's doctrine as applied to lands of copyhold or customary tenure, or at any rate, to lands whereof the escheat is in a subject; and to that view of it we shall address our observations.

Now, with regard to the nature of the title by escheat. Escheat is, according to the older writers, a species of reversion. It is sometimes spoken of as an estate coming to the lord by accident; (Co. Litt. 13. a.); as a fruit or perquisite of tenure; (Wright's Ten. 116); but it is never we believe spoken of as a continuation of the estate of the tenant. Bracton speaks of it as a reversion. "Revertitur terra" is the expression used by him, in speaking of escheat for default of heirs. (Lib. 2, fol. 23). And Sir M. Wright says, "When a feud or fee determines for want of heirs, vel propter delictum tenantis, the land falls back to the lord; and the land returning to the lord upon such determination of the fee or tenure, is called an escheat." (Wright's Ten. 115). And further, the same learned writer, speaking of the description of escheat taken from its etymological formation, (escheoir, to happen), and distinguishing it from forfeiture, observes, "Strictly speaking, according to the legal notion of an escheat, it imports something happening or returning to the lord upon a determination of tenure only." (Wright's Ten. 117). So that, according to these writers, escheat, so far from being a continuation of the same estate which was in the last tenant, cannot arise till that estate has been exhausted. The title to land by escheat is, according to their description of it, the title to the reversion of the land after a particular determination of the estate in the land granted to the tenant. And it seems necessarily to follow, that the lord taking by escheat, does not take the estate of the party dying seised without heirs, but comes in of his own elder estate in the reversion.

The lord taking by escheat was, it is true, liable to the incumbrances created by the last tenant, as, for instance, to a rent granted by him, or to the dower of the tenant's wife, on the principle that, as the tenant might wholly defeat the lord's title to an escheat by alienation of the whole, he must consequently have every inferior power. The liability of the lord to the tenant's incumbrances may at first sight appear to shew, that the estate taken by escheat is the estate of the last tenant. But it amounts, in fact, to no more than this, that the tenant might alienate all or any part of his estate in the land; and to the extent to which he did so alienate his estate, the reversion of the lord had nothing to fasten upon, being merely the reversion of the land on the determination of the estate granted to the tenant. An incumbrance made by the tenant or by act of law on the tenant's estate prevented, pro tanto, the determination of that estate, until which the estate of the lord did not come into existence.

That the lord taking by escheat comes in, not of the same estate as the tenant had, but by his older and distinct title, is we think also proved by the rule, that the lord coming in by escheat was not compellable to execute a trust. Thus, in an old case, (Stephens v. Bailey, Nels. 107, 17 Car. 2), it was stated in argument, and not denied, that where a person seised in fee contracts to sell his estate, and dies before assurance, without any heir, so that the land escheats to the lord, the Court will not compel the lord to convey to the vendee. In other words, that the lord comes in discharged of the trust, which he clearly could not do if he came in as of the estate of the last tenant, for the tenant's estate would be undoubtedly in the hands of any party claiming through him, charged with the trust created by such tenant.

So it has been held, that, if a trust be created of a copyhold, and the trustee die without heir, so that the land reverts to the lord, he shall have it free from the trust; (see 1 Strange, 454; Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 231, per Lord Mansfield); and in a very late case, where a party admitted as a copyholder was, as mortgagee, a trustee of the copyhold estate for himself to the extent of his mortgage money, and subject thereto for the mortgagor, and there was no entry on the court roll that could give the lord notice of the condition, Lord Brougham, advertent to Burgess v. Wheate, held that, failing heirs of the copyholder, the lord was entitled to enter on the copyhold as an escheat, free from the trust. (Attorney-General v. Duke of Leeds, 2 My. & K. 343).

In Burgess v. Wheate, in the argument of the Master of the Rolls, the estate of the lord taking by escheat is treated clearly as a distinct estate, and not as a continuance of the estate granted originally to the tenant. (See 1 Eden, pp. 191 and 207). "Though it may seem paradoxical, he says, to modern ears, a feoffment to A. and his heirs did not pass a fee-simple originally, in the sense in which we now use it, but only an estate to be enjoyed as a marum beneficium without the power of alienation in prejudice of the heir or the lord. And the heirs took it successively as an usufructuary interest and in default of heirs, the land escheated, or reverted strictly speaking." (Eden, p. 191).

On the whole, from the nature of the title by escheat, as laid down in the books to which we have referred, and from the decisions which we have cited we submit, that there are at least strong grounds for considering the title of the lord by escheat as not the estate of the last tenant, but a distinct and elder estate which never was in the tenant; and that the principle was this—that the tenant might prevent the estate of the lord from arising by continuing his own estate; and that, to the extent to which he did continue his own estate by alienating or charging it, or suffering it to be charged by act of law, the lord's estate by escheat would be diminished. But so far as the act or acquiescence of the tenant did not keep alive his estate, the elder estate of the lord in his reversion would arise in possession on the determination of the estate of the tenant.

Such, we submit, was the state of the law before the statutes referred to in Evans v. Brown. And we apprehend that, as to the nature of the estate by escheat, those statutes make no difference. They do not purport to alter the nature of any estates, but merely to impose on certain kinds of estates liabilities to which before they were not subject. The 1 Will. 4, c. 47, for instance, does not affect to alter the nature or extent of the estate of a tenant in fee, but, firstly, prevents the effect of those modes of alienation by which such tenants, having made their estates liable to creditors, if those estates were permitted to descend to their heirs, could defraud their creditors by diverting their estates into another channel, and causing them to vest in devisees; and secondly, makes assets, for the purpose of paying simple contract debts, the estates of certain persons, whose estates were not by law affected with such debts. So we conceive, with great submission, that no intention appears in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 104, to alter the nature of estates, but only to extend the liabilities of the estate of the tenant dying seised. If that estate pass into any hands, it is affected by the 3 & 4 Will. 4 and the question is, whether the statute points at any estate as falling within it, other than the estate, strictly speaking, of the tenant dying seised. The words are, "that when any person shall die seised of or entitled to any estate or interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, or other real estate, &c., the same shall be assets;" that is, we apprehend, not the land, but the estate which the tenant dying seised had in the land. If the act stopped here, it might, we apprehend, be even then contended with a fair shew of legal reason, that the legislature did not intend to affect the estate of any party coming in, not under the tenant dying seised, but of a distinct estate. But the subsequent part of the clause, using only the words "heirs and devisees," seems to explain the intention of the legislature, and to confine the effect of the act to parties taking in either of the characters designated. If, in the second branch of the clause, the legislature had used terms which would not have included every mode of devolution of the estate of the tenant dying seised, that might deprive it of its value as an exponent of the intention. But if on the contrary we find that the words heirs and devisees used in the second part of the clause, correspond fully with, but do not necessarily go a step beyond the plain intention of the first part of the clause, viz. to make the estate of the party dying seised liable, then it seems but a fair inference to conclude, that the legislature having used specific terms which would cover all the estate of the tenant dying seised, and no more, had in view that estate alone. According to the report of Evans v. Brown, the Court said, that, having regard to the words of the act, it would seem that whoever succeeded to the estate was bound by them. The creditors had a legislative provision that the estate should be assets, and in whatever way the right of the lord arose, he must take the reversion with the liability to which the legislature had subjected it, and could not claim to have it free from the testator's debts. It does not appear whether his Lordship adverted to the question whether the lord does come in of the estate of the tenant, or of a distinct estate. From the expressions above quoted, it may rather be inferred that he did not consider the lord's reversion as a distinct estate.

Review.

A Practical Treatise on Equity Pleadings. By RICHARD GRIVIES WELFORD, Esq., Barrister.

[Stevens & Norton, 1842.]

We should have thought that the field of equity pleading was so completely occupied, inch by inch, that the greatest ingenuity would scarcely have found standing-room for a new work on that subject. With the undying treatise of Lord Redesdale on the broad principles of the science of Pleading; with Mr. Justice Story's elaborate and detailed work, going not merely into the principles, but to a considerable extent into the details of the whole subject; with a careful and practical analysis of the complex subject of Parties*; and, lastly, with a work which, purporting to be a mere treatise on practice, contains, under that modest designation, a masterly inquiry into all the mysteries of demurrers, pleas, and answers†; it seems scarcely possible to imagine how a new and useful essay on equity pleading should be constructed. Nevertheless, Mr. Welford has succeeded in composing a work which is not deficient in practical utility. The reader must not look for the philosophical arrangement and scientific definitions of Lord Redesdale, nor the acute and learned reasoning on debated points of the treatise on practice, to which we have referred; but he will find simply a methodical and careful statement of what is the rule, where a rule is settled by authority; and of what is the doubt, where no rule is settled, accompanied by a copious though not excessive reference to the authorities. Of the plan of the work we will, however, let the author speak for himself. "Undertaken," he says, "at the suggestion of an esteemed and eminent member of the equity bar, and as the means of compelling myself to institute that close examination of pleading in equity which so technical a subject demands, it professes to be little more than a compilation; and the only merit I can hope to claim is, that of care and diligence in the collation of previous works upon this subject, and in the bringing down the decided cases to the present time." (Preface, p. 1).

In pursuance of this plan, the author has brought together under one head, in a concise and convenient form, the learning which is scattered on the subject of pleading, through a great variety of other works in which particular points of pleading are incidentally noticed. He commences by discussing the nature of bills in equity; first as to their substance; next as to their form. He then passes to the investigation of the different kinds of bills that may be filed, or in other words, the different matters in respect of which relief may be sought by bill. He then treats of the defence to a suit in equity by demurrer, plea, and answer, or by the combinations of these several modes of defence. On these various departments of the pleadings in a suit of equity, Mr. Welford has diligently and (as far as we have been able to examine closely his positions) accurately stated the rules of pleading; and he has pursued wisely, as we think, for the convenience of the reader, the plan of incorporating in the text, at the part treating of each particular subject, the alterations effected by the New Orders.

Thus, for instance, in speaking of the defence combined of demurrer, plea, and answer, he says, "If a demurrer is overruled, the defendant may insist on the same matter by way of answer; and where it is doubtful whether the defence will hold as a plea, it may be stated as answer, which may pray the same benefit as if it had been pleaded. And by a recent Order it is directed that a defendant shall be at liberty by answer to decline answering any interrogatory, or part of an interrogatory, from answering which he might have protected himself by demurrer; and that he shall be at liberty so to decline, notwithstanding he shall answer other parts of the bill, from which he might have protected himself by demurrer." (P. 385). And again, as to taking objections for want of parties, he says, "Hitherto, where the objection of want of parties has been made by answer, the court has ordered the cause to stand over for the purpose of adding parties, upon the plaintiff paying to the defendant the costs of the day, if by such addition the nature of the case made by the bill was not changed. The proper time for taking the objection of want of parties was upon the opening of the pleadings before the merits were discussed. But it often happened, that after a cause had been thoroughly heard, the court has found itself compelled to let the cause stand over to add parties. The plaintiff might at the hearing obviate the objection of want of a particular party, by waiving the relief he was entitled to against such party. But the decree would not bind those who were absent. To meet the inconveniences often occasioned by this practice, one of the recent Orders provides, that where the defendant shall, by his answer, suggest that the bill is defective for want of parties, the plaintiff within fourteen days after answer filed, may set down the cause for argument upon that objection only; and where the plaintiff shall proceed to a hearing, notwithstanding an objection for want of parties taken by the answer, he shall not, at the hearing, if the defendant's objection be then allowed, be entitled as of course to an order to amend his bill by adding parties. But the court may dismiss the bill. It is observable that the order is permissive only, and not compulsory on the plaintiff. But if he omits to do so, it will be at the risk of having his bill dismissed at the hearing." (P. 414).

As Mr. Welford's work claims, and in fact possesses, no merit otherwise than as a purely practical work, we think it necessary to qualify the commendations of which we have thought it deserving in that respect, by observing, that it is deficient in three very material points, as a work of reference either for the student or the draftsman: first, it has no table of contents; secondly, it has no table of cases; and, thirdly, the references from the index to the pages of the text are extremely inaccurate, the paging in the index being, in reference to several parts of the work, constantly either a page in advance or a page in arrear of the paging of the text itself. The first omission is, perhaps, not of much consequence; but a table of cases is, as every practitioner knows, of very great consequence in facilitating research, as it frequently happens that a particular case is the centre of a discussion of all the cases bearing on a particular subject; and hence, the reference to that case in a text-book is the readiest index to the part where the matter sought is to be found. As to the inaccurate paging of the index, it is a matter of mere editorial carelessness, which, though a trivial fault in appearance, is a very serious one in a book intended to be used in the draftsman's chambers, where it must not be forgotten by authors, that text-books are in general really worth nothing except as economisers of time.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PRACTICE OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

To Attorneys and Solicitors.

55, Chancery-lane, 9th April, 1842.

FOR the convenience of persons in the Western and Central Districts of London, and particularly of Gentlemen connected with the Law, THE LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY have opened a Branch Office at 55, Chancery-lane, where Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information connected with the business of the Company, may be procured; and where Examinations of Parties whose Lives are proposed for Assurance may be taken, and Policies effected, as at the Chief Office of the Company, in Charlotte-row, Mansion-house.

Your attention is solicited to some of the distinguishing features of this Company, which have been introduced after mature deliberation, and which will be most conveniently pointed out by referring to Policies, as Money Transaction and Family Provision Policies.

MONEY TRANSACTION POLICIES.—Your professional experience and acquaintance with the records of the Courts of Law and Equity, must have convinced you that considerable changes were required in the practice and rules of Life Offices, to render this class of Policies valid and unimpeachable documents of security, which no unforeseen circumstances or future accidents could invalidate. This Company has endeavoured, and they think successfully, to render their Policies as indefeasible and negotiable securities as is possible, consistently with a due regard to the safety of the contracting parties; and to effect this object the Company has introduced the following clause into their Deed of Settlement:—

CLAUSE 78.—“That every Policy issued by the Company shall be indefeasible and indisputable, and the fact of the issuing of the same shall be conclusive evidence of its validity; and it shall not be lawful for the Company to delay payment of the money assured thereby, on the ground of any error, mistake or omission, however important, made by or on the part of the person or persons effecting the same; and that, on the contrary, the amount receivable under the same shall be paid at the time stipulated by the Policy, to the person entitled thereto, as if no such error, mistake or omission had been made or discovered, unless the Policy shall have been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.”

FAMILY PROVISION POLICIES.—In the well-founded belief that Life Assurance business is profitable, persons making provisions for their families, and contemplating a long duration of time between the date of the Policy and the claim to arise under it, generally prefer Assurances which may carry with them a right to participate in the profits to be realized by the Company during the currency of their Policies. By the Deed of Constitution of this Company, the participating Assured are entitled to the WHOLE OF THE MUTUAL PROFITS, as if they had been Assured in a purely Mutual Society; and they have, at the same time, the security not only of the Funds of the Company, arising from the accumulated premiums, but also the proprietary funds and subscribed Capital of the Company. To the Shareholders are allotted only those profits which are realized by the investment of their own paid capital, and from the excess of the premiums derived from the Non-participating Assurances. This mode of Division of Profits is peculiar to this Company.

In order to provide against the defeat of a Policy in the hands of a CREDITOR, by the DEBTOR, whose Life is Assured leaving the country, and going beyond the prescribed limits, the Company grant WHOLE WORLD POLICES, whereby, on condition of receiving an extra premium, varying in amount according to the circumstances of the case, but fixed and determined at the time of issuing the Policy, the debtor, on whose Life an Assurance has been effected, is entitled to go to or reside in any part of the world, without invalidating the Assurance.

To enable a party to effect an Assurance at the LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, and to entitle him to discontinue it at a less sacrifice than by any other plan, a seven years' Half-premium system has been introduced; and, upon comparing the following scale with any other which has been devised for reducing present payments, it will be seen how much more economically a loan transaction can be fortified by this kind of Policy than by any other. The Half-premium system possesses a further advantage over temporary Assurances, or those for a Term of Years, from the Assured having the option of continuing for Life the Policy which he may have procured for a mere temporary purpose.

THE COMMISSION allowed to Attornies is 10l. per cent. upon the first, and 5l. per cent. upon all future premiums; and the Commission continues to be payable to the Attorney, who completed the Assurance with the Company, although the future premiums may be paid by others.

The usual weekly Board day is Thursday, but Policies may be obtained any day betwixt the hours of 10 and 5.

WE had occasion in a former number of THE JURIST (vol. 5, p. 617) to notice the theory of a recent writer on the subject of Criminal Jurisprudence, that crimes of violence are, in all cases, the result of a maniacal disorganization, or moral insanity. For the reception of such a theory, the public mind does not appear to be fully prepared; but at the same time it is obvious that the current of public opinion on criminal jurisprudence is running in that direction. There are but few we believe at present who will admit that, generally speaking, a party committing an act of criminal violence is, in the common acceptance of the term, labouring under an insane excitement, or incapacity of the intellect to distinguish between criminal and lawful acts; but, at the same time, many, nay we might almost say the entire public, are now easily induced to rush to the conclusion, that any crime of particular magnitude and atrocity, and committed without the ordinary visible motives, is the result of insanity. For a long period, the practice in regard to crime of the suicidal character, has been not, it is true, absolutely to take the act of self-destruction as evidence of insanity in the suicide, but to lean so strongly to the general doctrine that insanity alone furnishes a sufficient motive for self-destruction, as to adopt, on such questions, as evidence of insane delusion, circumstances which, if the question of the party's sanity were to be inquired into in relation to any other transaction, would be treated as evidence of no value whatever. The same disposition has been for some time developing itself in the public mind in regard to acts forming the highest class of homicidal crime, viz. attempts to take by violence the life of the Head of the State, forming a striking contrast to the disposition to doubt insanity in certain other cases, in the very teeth of evidence. The hardness, the obstinacy with which men shut their understandings to the admission of a belief in insanity, when the question is, for instance, whether a testator's will is or not void for insanity, are absolutely ludicrous, if contrasted with the intense capacity for belief which they exhibit, when insanity is to be assigned as the ground of an attempt to commit the gravest of crimes—the murder of the Sovereign.

The assumption is, that, in the former case, the performance of an act, of itself of a sane character, is a proof of sanity; in the latter, that the doing an act for which no rational motive can be assigned, is of itself evidence of insanity. But it is obvious that the distinction has no foundation in correct reasoning, except on the assumption, that non-compliance with the laws of the country is of itself the result of that state of moral incapacity to appreciate and distinguish between right and wrong, which deserves to be ranked in the list of insane manifestations. For when the public find a man committing or attempting some very monstrous crime, and it is asserted that there could be no rational motive for the act, what is meant by that expression? It must be meant, we apprehend, that his crime is so obviously barren of any object or result beyond its mere commission, that a sane mind could not be induced to attempt it. But this is in fact no more than fixing the standard of rationality in regard to motives, at that point which it has reached in the minds of the mass of the community. In other words, it amounts to this: that the mass of the community have arrived, with reference to certain crimes, among others, to the crime of attempting to destroy the Sovereign, at the clear and definite conviction, that crimes of that nature are such monstrous infringements of the rules of justice and prudence, and so utterly uncalculated for by any incitements to which the great majority of the community are liable, that they could never commit them while in possession of mental sanity; and hence they are extremely willing to conclude, that to attempt such crimes is prima facie an indication of insanity.

With regard to lesser crimes, the minds of the great mass of the community have not arrived at such definite conclusions. We do not mean, that many are to be found who will actually justify crimes of violence, as, for instance, murder, or housebreaking, or the various forms of robbery; but that many more rational motives are believed to exist for committing simple murder, than for committing the murder of the Sovereign; still more for committing robbery than murder; and that still further does the belief in the possibility of a rational motive for the commission of crime exist in reference to crimes of a still lower degree, until, in fact, we reach that point where, in the minds of the mass of the community, the commission of certain acts, treated as crimes by the laws, is considered as so natural, as to be the result rather of the regular operation of the human mind and passions, than of any disturbed or insane condition of either. As the perception of the mass of the community, with reference to the distinction between right and wrong, becomes more acute and accurate, so will, we apprehend, the disposition increase to treat as the offspring of a disorganised or imbecile state of the mind, all infringements of those laws by which the community states and defines its general conviction of what is right and what is wrong. We do not indeed regret altogether to see the growing disposition to view great crimes as impossible, except to minds of an insane character; for, in our opinion, it will be a great improvement in criminal legislation, to take obedience to the laws in general as the standard of moral sanity. But in order to carry the new principle into effect with advantage, the nature of it ought to be kept clearly and constantly in view. At present, the most absurd consequences arise from the struggle between the disposition to consider that a man must be insane to commit certain crimes, and the indisposition on the other hand to admit as a principle, that the commission of the crime is itself the manifestation of insanity. Hence, when a man commits some monstrous crime, every one, from the minister to the judge, from the judge to the jury, and from the powerful journalist who sways, down to the pettiest reader who is swayed, struggles to collect from the past life and the present manner of the accused evidence of insanity; and in such cases, the most trivial circumstances, a peculiar look, a morose or solitary disposition, the perpetration of doggerel rhyme at some antecedent period,—anything and everything—will satisfy a jury that the accused is insane. All this is both absurd and pernicious. It tends to bring ridicule on the laws, and to corrupt the very source of justice, the sound judgment and honesty of juries.

While the law owns no such rule, as that crime is of itself the result and evidence of insanity, there should be no struggle to infer insanity in any particular class of cases, from evidence which would not, under other circumstances, warrant a belief in insanity. But whether the law should not adopt the principle of holding certain infractions of the laws as of themselves acts of insanity, is a question deserving of consideration, not less from its own intrinsic importance, than from the very unsettled and unsatisfactory state of the public mind on these subjects.

We have great pleasure in inserting some observations communicated to us by a learned writer, upon the case on which we took the liberty of commenting in our last number. (Brown v. Evans, ante, p. 380). We need hardly say, that, on points of law open to doubt and difficulty, it has always been our desire to lay before our readers the arguments on both sides of the question, as our object is not to shew that we are, what no lawyer can expect to be, always right, but to open the law, or at least to call the attention of our readers to the authorities and legal principles throwing light on the subject we may have selected for discussion. Our correspondent disputes the correctness of the view that we presumed to take of Lord Langdale's decision in Brown v. Evans, and on the following grounds: he observes first, with reference to the question whether the Master of the Rolls treated the title of the lord as a distinct title, that there is nothing in the judgment, as reported, to justify the inference that his Lordship did not consider the lord's reversion as a distinct estate from that of the tenant. "It appears," says our correspondent, "from the report, that the nature of the lord's title was urged in the argument. Whether therefore it does or does not appear from the report, that his Lordship referred in his judgment to the fact that the lord comes in of a distinct estate, and by a paramount title, there is no doubt that this fact was brought to his notice; and it must be presumed that he gave it his full consideration. Granting therefore the position that the estate, which reverts to the lord by escheat, is not the same as that which was previously vested in the tenant, let us consider his Lordship's construction of the act. It may be observed, that there has been a disposition in the legislature of late years to abridge the rights of lords of manors, arising out of the ancient and in many cases very inconvenient doctrines of feuds. Thus, by 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 23, the lord's right of reverter in case of the death of a trustee or mortgagee without heirs, or on his attainder or conviction, is charged with a trust to which it was not previously subject; and that too, without any compensation being awarded to the lord. And in the act now under consideration, the same principle is acted upon, in that it makes copyholds and customary freeholds liable for the payment of every description of debts, although copyholds were not previously liable to the payment even of debts of record, or debts due to the crown, on the principle that if a creditor were allowed to take possession of a copyhold estate, it would be prejudicial to the lord's right; and for this reason the copyholds of a trader within the bankrupt laws, were not made like other real estate equitable assets within the stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 47, s. 9. Again, in construing acts of parliament, the intention of the Legislature, as appearing from the general scope of the enactment, is not to be lost sight of; and when it is remembered that the object of the act under consideration was to facilitate the payment of their demands to creditors, and that the feudal rights of lords of manors are directly invaded by it, for the purpose of better effectuating that object, we have a clue to the interpretation of the clause in question, which, it must be confessed, is rather ambiguous in its terms. Now, in construing the clause, the words lands, tenements, and hereditaments, may be fairly deemed to be the correlatives of the word same; or even if the word same be referred to the words estate or interest, there seems to be no sound objection to construing the act as prolonging the estate of the debtor for the benefit of his creditors. The adoption of either of these constructions would remove much of the difficulty; and the act would, in its operation, be considered to intercept or postpone the lord's right of reverter, rather than to charge the estate to which he would become entitled by the death of the tenant without heirs. As to the other ground suggested for the interpretation of the act, that the latter part of the clause points specifically to heirs and devisees, it appears from the report of Brown v. Evans that this was called to his Lordship's attention. But he does not appear to have attributed much weight to the latter part of the clause, as affording an indication of intention for the interpretation of the former part of it; and in my opinion justly. For it appears to me, that so far from being intended to be explanatory of the first part of the clause as interpreted in the observations on Brown v. Evans, the latter part of it was introduced to obviate similar difficulties to those which followed from the construction put upon 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 14, which was held to give a remedy only against the heir and devisee jointly; but which difficulties were removed by the provisions of 1 Will. 4, c. 47, as to the cases within the purview of those acts, the latter act giving a remedy against the devisee alone as well as jointly with the heirs, and also against the devisee of a devisee. Upon the whole, I confess that it does appear to me that the language of the act is sufficiently comprehensive to justify the decision. And I am sure that the justice of the case is with it, having regard to the claims of the creditors of the party deceased."

PROBATE DUTY ON REAL ESTATE BELONGING TO PARTNERS.

A case of some difficulty, upon which a difference of opinion exists in the profession, occurs upon the question as to whether or not Probate Duty is payable upon a testator's share of real property, purchased out of a partnership fund, and held by the partnership for partnership purposes*. As the discussion of the subject may be of advantage to the profession, we will proceed to give a short statement of some of the reasons which induce us to consider that such property is liable to Probate Duty.

By the 38th section of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, it is provided, that the person applying for probate shall make oath that the estate and effects of the deceased, "for or in respect of which the probate is to be granted," exclusive of property of which the testator was possessed as trustee, and not beneficially, are under a certain sum. The first question, therefore, that arises is, what is the general nature of the property "for or in respect of which probate is to be granted?"

In the case of The Attorney-General v. Hope, (1 C., M. & R. 530), it was said by Lord Brougham, C., "that probate was granted by the ordinary in former times in consequence of the interest that he had in the personality of individuals to be applied to pious uses for the safety of the souls of those individuals. That is probably the origin of grants of administration . . . The relinquishing of the right to the property, and a vesting of it in the administrator or executor, by granting probate with the will annexed, or granting administration if there was no will, was the origin in later times of the claim of the ordinary to vest in other parties the powers previously exercised by himself."

Again, in the case of Platt v. Routh, (6 Mee. & W. 791, overruling The Attorney-General v. Staff, 2 C. & M. 124; and Palmer v. Whitmore, 5 Sim. 178), there was an inquiry as to whether or not probate duty was payable upon the probate of a will under the following circumstances:—J. R. by his will, after directing his real estate to be sold and converted into personalty, gave the general residue of his personal estate to his executors, upon trust to permit his daughter to receive the rents and dividends thereof during her life, and after her decease, upon trust for such persons (other than certain persons therein mentioned) as his said daughter should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, then over. In exercise of the power of appointment under her father's will, the daughter by will gave the said residuary personal estate to certain persons therein mentioned; and it was held by the Court of Exchequer, that no probate duty was payable upon the probate of the daughter's will in respect of the estate and effects appointed thereby. Lord Abinger, C.B., delivering the judgment of the court in that case, says, "The question is, whether property circumstanced like the present is property of the deceased 'for or in respect of which the probate is to be granted;' and the House of Lords having decided that probate is granted in respect only of that property, which, but for the will, the ordinary would have been entitled to administer; and it being quite clear that neither the ordinary nor the executor ever could have administered any part of this property, we cannot hold that this is property for or in respect of which the probate is granted."

The test, therefore, for ascertaining whether or not probate duty is payable, appears to be, whether or not the ordinary, but for the will, would have been entitled to administer the property in question; in other words, it would seem that the duty is payable upon all property of which the ordinary would be entitled to grant administration in case of the owner's dying intestate.

Let us then next consider, whether or not the property in question comes within that description.

By 21 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 3, "In case any person die intestate, the said ordinary shall grant the administration of the goods of the person deceased to the persons therein mentioned, taking surety of him or them, to whom shall be made such commission, for the true administration of the goods, chattels, and debts, which he or they shall be so authorized to administer, &c."

By 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, "All ordinaries shall upon granting administration, take sufficient bonds, with two or more able sureties, with the condition to be void if the said A. B. (the administrator) inter alia do make or cause to be made a true inventory of all 'the goods, chattels, and credits' of the deceased which have or shall come to the possession or knowledge of him the said A. B., or into the hands and possession of any other person or persons for him, and do well and truly administer the same according to law."

By 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 38, "No ecclesiastical court shall grant letters of administration of the estate and effects of any person, without first requiring and receiving an affidavit that the estate and effects of the deceased, for or in respect of which the letters of administration are to be granted, are under the value of a certain sum to be therein specified, in order that the proper and full stamp duty may be paid on such letters of administration."

Taking the three statutes together, it seems that the ordinary is to grant administration of all the goods, chattels, and debts or credits of the intestate; and they are to be administered by the administrator, whether they shall have come to his possession or knowledge, or into the hands and possession of any other person or persons for him.

Is this then property which can be said to be either in the administrator's possession or knowledge, or in the hands and possession of some other person or persons for him?

From a series of cases collected in Collyer on Partnership, pp. 84 et seq., 2nd ed., beginning with Thornton v. Dixon, (3 Bro. C. C. 192), and ending with Morris v. Kearley, (2 Y. & C. 139), that learned writer deduces the following proposition: that "freehold property used for the purposes of a trading partnership, originally purchased with the partnership funds, is in equity to be considered as converted into personalty, not only for the purposes of the partnership, but for all other purposes; and that, upon the death of the partner, the person who is seised of the legal estate in such freehold estates is a trustee for the personal representatives of the deceased partner."

If then this proposition, that the beneficial interest in such property belongs to the personal representatives of the deceased partner, be correct (of which there seems no great reason for doubt, inasmuch as the subsequent cases of Randall v. Randall, (7 Sim. 271), and Cookson v. Cookson, (8 Sim. 529), do not appear to interfere with it*), it would seem to be a part of the administrator's duty to convert such property into money, for the purpose of distribution amongst the personal representatives of the deceased. For that purpose he "has a right to have the value ascertained in the way in which it can be best ascertained, by sale." (Per Lord Eldon, C., in Crawshaw v. Collins, 15 Ves. 227). And, consequently, such property must be considered as a part of the debts or credits of the intestate, either in the administrator's possession or knowledge, or in the hands and possession of some other person or persons for him, and therefore property, which, but for the will, the ordinary would have been entitled to administer, and liable to probate duty, as well upon that account, as to enable the administrator to compel the sale against the surviving partner.

STEPHEN RICHARDS, Master.

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—Robert Bateson, Esq., for the county of Londonderry, in the room of Sir Robert Bateson, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds.

MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The following gentlemen have been appointed Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery:—John William Fenwick, of North Shields, Northumberland; John William Browne, of Swindon, Wiltshire; William Clifton, of Watford, Hertfordshire; Thomas Pinchard, of Wolverhampton, Staffordshire.

* It may be a question whether these cases can stand, but they certainly seem to be irreconcilable with Mr. Collyer's general proposition.—Ed.

Monday, May 30.

The Lord Chancellor moved the second reading of the Jurisdiction of Justices Bill. The Bill was founded on the Report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the subject by Lord John Russell. His Lordship said, that the way in which he had proceeded, adopting in fact the Report of the Commissioners, was to refer all classes of misdemeanor which were most difficult to try, to the Judges of Assize; except with regard to transportation for life, in cases where the party had returned from transportation before the expiration of his term, then it was necessary to try again the original offence; and such cases would be referred to the Quarter Sessions.

Some discussion took place as to the propriety of having professional men appointed to preside as Chairmen at Quarter Sessions; after which the Bill was read a second time.

LONDON, JUNE 11, 1842.

So much of the foreign and domestic commerce of this country is now carried on by means of agents, that there are few parts of the English Commercial Law of greater practical importance than that which relates to the power of the factor to bind his principal. According to the rule, that the authority given to an agent is to be strictly followed, it was very early held, that a factor, who is an agent for the sale of goods, had no power, although the apparent owner, to pledge them. This, when it came, by a series of decisions, to be fully established, caused great apprehensions amongst the mercantile community, and threatened seriously to injure the commerce of the country. In consequence of applications to the Legislature, and after a Select Committee had reported on the subject, the 4 Geo. 4, c. 83, was passed, and afterwards amended by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, in which, and the cases since decided upon it, is to be found the law upon this subject, which has been in force until the present time.

The provisions of that statute have, however, in many instances, been found insufficient; and in others, the construction put upon it by the Judges has rendered it nugatory; so that it was found necessary to have recourse again to the Legislature; and a Bill, intitled "An Act to amend the Law relating to Advances bona fide made to Agents intrusted with Goods," has passed through both Houses of Parliament, and only waits the royal assent to become part of the law. We propose, therefore, briefly to examine how far the 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, and the subsequent decisions upon it, have been altered or affected by this Bill. And in doing so we shall avail ourselves of a statement, some time since sent to us, which was read, on the 26th January, 1842, at a meeting of deputations from the Commercial Associations of Liverpool, appointed to consider the state of the Law of Principal and Factor, and afterwards printed. The 2nd section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, enacted, that any person intrusted with and in possession of any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, wharfinger's certificate, warranty, or order for the delivery of goods, shall be deemed and taken to be the true owner of the goods mentioned in the document, so as to give validity to any contract to be made by such person for the sale of such goods, or the deposit or pledge thereof as a security for any money or negotiable security advanced or given upon the faith of the document; provided the party buying or taking a deposit of the goods has no notice that the person intrusted is not the real owner thereof. It will be observed, that this section only refers to a person intrusted with and in possession of the documents of title, and not the goods themselves; and a pledge of goods remained, as it was before the act, unprotected. The reason of this appears to have been, that the documents might be made to designate who the owner was, but the goods themselves could not; and he might, therefore, by a writing on the former, prevent the agent from deceiving other persons; which if he neglected to do, it was not unreasonable that he should suffer. The new act, however, removes this distinction; and by sect. 1, places an agent intrusted with the possession of goods upon the same footing as one intrusted with the documents of title. And whilst in the former act certain documents of title only are specified, the latter embraces all of them. The meaning of the 2nd section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, came under the consideration of the Court of Exchequer in Phillips v. Huth, (6 Mees. & W. 572); and Parke, B., delivered a very elaborate judgment, in which the Court decided that it was necessary, "in order to give effect to that clause, that the owner should have intrusted the factor with the document; not that it is necessary that the owner should have had personal possession of the document, so as to be able to mark it with his name, and himself delivered it to the factor; for if his own agent, general or special, puts it into the hands of the factor with the factor's name on it, or if the factor be instructed by the owner to obtain the document in that state, and does so, no doubt he is 'intrusted' by the owner with it within the meaning of the act. But, in order to constitute an intrusting of such a document, it is necessary that the owner should have intended the factor to possess it in that form, at the time when he had the possession. Intrusting with the document is essentially different from enabling a person to become possessed of it, from giving him the means of obtaining it." And they therefore decided that the factors in that case, in whose hands the bills of lading indorsed in blank of two cargoes of tobacco had been placed by the owners, thus enabling them to obtain dock warrants in their own names, and who had so obtained them, were not intrusted with them within the meaning of the act; and that a pledge by the factors of such dock-warrants was invalid. This decision created great surprise amongst merchants; as it in effect limited the operation of the act almost exclusively to bills of lading, out of which the other specified documents generally arose, and were obtained by the agent himself in the course of his employment. It is, however, if we may so express it, reversed by the 4th section of the present act, which declares, that any agent intrusted with and possessed of a document of title, whether derived immediately from the owner of the goods, or obtained by reason of such agent's having been intrusted with the possession of the goods, or of any other document of title thereto, shall be deemed and taken to have been intrusted with the possession of the goods represented by such former document of title. It was also considered, under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, that an advance made on one day upon a promise to deposit documents of title on the following day, which was accordingly done, was not within the act, because it was only made upon the faith of a promise of the documents, and the subsequent pledge of the documents in pursuance of the promise, was a pledge for an antecedent debt, which by the 3rd section was declared, although made without notice, to confer only such right as the party making the pledge at that time possessed. This is remedied by the same section of the present statute, which enacts, that where an advance shall be bonâ fide made upon the faith of an agreement to deposit goods or documents, and they shall be received, whether at the time or subsequently, by the person making the advance, without notice of want of authority on the part of the agent, the advance shall be deemed an advance upon the faith of goods or documents within the meaning of the act. Except in this respect, the law as to a pledge for an antecedent debt remains unaltered. In the statement we before referred to it is said, "that it very frequently happens that a bill of exchange drawn against a shipment is presented to the consignee for acceptance before the arrival of the bill of lading. The consignee, confiding in the promise of the shipper to send forward the bill of lading, accepts the draft to save the shipper from the consequences of its dishonour. If his confidence should be misplaced, the consignee must, of course, submit to the loss; but if the bill of lading comes as promised, he considers the security perfected." If the consignee has no notice that the shipper is not the actual and bonâ fide owner of the goods, he will be entitled to a lien on the bill of lading, by virtue of the 1st section of the Geo. 4, c. 94. But if to the knowledge of the consignee the shipper is only an agent, which is, as we are informed, very generally the case in the trade between this country and the United States of America, where the planters in the interior of the country employ an agent at the nearest shipping port, whose communications to the consignee of the goods usually contain an intimation of his being only an agent, the transaction is not within that section, and can only be protected, at all, by the above provision in the new Act. The words there used are sufficient, we apprehend, to embrace these cases. The 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, was also defective in another respect, that it did not protect a deposit of documents of title given in exchange for other documents which had been properly pledged. And the new Act therefore provides, that where any agreement for a pledge shall be made, in consideration of the delivery to the agent of other goods and documents, upon which the person delivering up the same had at the time a valid lien in respect of a previous advance; such agreement, if bonâ fide, shall be deemed to be a contract made in consideration of an advance within the meaning of the Act, and shall be as valid as if the consideration had been a bonâ fide present advance of money; provided that the lien thereby acquired shall not exceed the value of the goods or documents of title delivered up and exchanged.

Many nice and difficult questions arose as to the notice of agency; Lord Tenterden (Evans v. Truman, 1 M. & Rob. 10) holding, that a party might have knowledge of a fact either by direct communication, or by being aware of circumstances which must lead a reasonable man to the conclusion that the fact was so. As these circumstances might be infinitely various, a wide field of litigation was thus thrown open; and many persons silently submitted to losses, rather than seek the uncertain result of an action. All this is cured by the present Act, which makes a pledge for an advance valid, notwithstanding notice of the agency.

When we have mentioned that the 7th section provides for the right of the owner of goods or documents which have been pledged to redeem them, or to recover the balance of the proceeds, we have, we believe, called our readers' attention to all the provisions of this new law; and we conclude, with expressing our hope that it will be found upon trial to satisfy the wishes of the mercantile community.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, June 7.

The Jurisdiction of Justices Bill went through committee pro forma.

The Bill printed ante, p. 179, to empower Coroners to take bail in cases of Manslaughter, has been thrown out.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—The Right Hon. Otway O'Connor, Earl of Desart, and Thomas Gladstone, Esq., for the borough of Ipswich, in the room of Rigby Wason and George Rezzie, Esqs. whose election has been declared void.

ON DEFEASIBLE PURCHASES AS DISTINGUISHABLE FROM MORTGAGES.

It occasionally happens, that estates are sold subject to a condition that the vendor may re-purchase within a limited time on certain terms; and on the other hand, there are many instances on record, of attempts by mortgagees to fetter and restrain that general right of redemption, which equity implies as an essential incident to all mortgage transactions. Until recently, there were few tasks more difficult than to determine on the authorities, the exact criteria by which a defeasible purchase might be distinguished from a mortgage.

The general rule that a mortgagee cannot stipulate for any benefit beyond legal interest, and cannot clog the equity of redemption with any condition or restriction, may be laid down as allowing of no exception. "In the case of a mortgage," said Lord Eldon in Seton v. Slade, (7 Ves. 273), "you shall not by special terms alter what this court says are the special terms of the contract." The single question to be determined, therefore, in each particular case is, Are the circumstances or the stipulations such as to induce the court to believe that the transaction was intended to be a mortgage, and not a sale? Nothing can shew the difficulty of deducing a satisfactory answer to this question from the authorities, (prior to the case of Williams v. Owen, to be noticed presently), than the vague and somewhat inconsistent terms in which this subject is treated in a recent learned treatise. Mr. Coote, in the third chapter of his work on Mortgages, (2nd ed. pp. 27 et seq.), has these passages:—

"So careful is equity to protect the debtor against the oppression of his creditor, that it will not allow the mortgagee to enter into a contract with the mortgagor, at the time of the loan, for the absolute purchase of the lands for a specific sum, in case of default made in payment of the mortgage-money at the appointed time; justly considering, that it would open a wide door to oppression, and enable the creditor to drive an inequitable and hard bargain with the debtor, who is rarely prepared to discharge his debt at the specific time."

"The rule must be distinguished from the cases in which the courts have considered the agreement not to amount to a mortgage, but to be a conditional purchase; and in which instances the vendor will, it seems, be kept to his contract. Of this class is the case of an agreement for the purchase of the equity of redemption entered into bona fide, and subsequently to a mortgage which was made and concluded without any reference to any such agreement, followed by a subsequent agreement between the parties, that the mortgagor might have the estate on payment of principal, interest, and costs; (Cotterell v. Purchase, Cas. tem. Talb. 61); and also the case of a release of the equity of redemption, with a collateral agreement to reconvey on repayment of the purchase-money."

"A further distinction, respecting which the authorities do not seem to be very clear, has also been made between mortgages and defeasible purchases, (as they are called), subject to re-purchase within a limited time, where the interest is taken by way of rent-charge; for it is said, that, in the latter case, the stipulations made between the parties must be strictly adhered to, or the estate of the grantee will become absolute. The cases on which this doctrine rests, are Floyer v. Lavington, (1 P. W. 268), and Mellor v. Lees, (2 Atk. 494)."

The cases on conditional purchases and mortgages are sufficiently contradictory; but the honour of creating this subtle distinction between "defeasible" and "conditional" purchases, and of subjecting agreements for rent-charges to a different rule from other contracts, belongs exclusively to the text writers. In Floyer v. Lavington, J. S. granted a rent-charge of 484l. a year to B. and his heirs, on condition, that if J. S. should at any time give notice to repay the consideration-money, which was 800l., by eight half-yearly instalments, and should accordingly pay the same and interest at any time during his life, then the grant should be void. J. S. did not covenant to pay the money, and the rate of interest being then 8l. per cent., the rent-charge was less than the interest would have been. It was held by Lord Cowper not redeemable after the death of J. S.; and his Lordship founded his judgment on the circumstance that the full value was given, and that the grantor had the election to re-purchase, not being compellable to re-pay the money, and that too long a time (sixty years) had elapsed. As to any supposed peculiarity attending the purchase of a rent-charge, there is no hint of such a thing throughout the case. The circumstances were more complicated in the other case of Mellor v. Lees, but the decision and the reasons of it were the same as in Floyer v. Lavington.

"Some writers," Mr. Coote proceeds to say, "have also considered the general rule, that the mortgagee shall not be allowed to enter into a contract with the mortgagor at the time of the loan for the absolute purchase of the land for a specific sum, in case of default in payment of the mortgage-money at the appointed time, not to apply, in case the payment of the money advanced and interest be limited to a particular period; and, for this doctrine, the case of Tasburgh v. Echlin (2 Bro. P. C. 285) is advanced as an authority."

In Tasburgh v. Echlin, Sir J. Eustace being seised in fee, subject to a term of which forty-three years were unexpired, of an estate, which, in possession, was worth 200l. per annum, in May, 1681, in consideration of 200l. conveyed the estate to C. Tasburgh and his heirs, in trust for J. Tasburgh, with a proviso, that if Sir J. Eustace, his heirs or assigns, should pay to C. Tasburgh, his executors, &c., at the end of five years, 200l., with interest at 10l. per cent. (which was then legal), he or his heirs might re-enter; but, otherwise, the estate of C. Tasburgh should be absolute, as well in equity as at law; and Sir J. Eustace released to C. Tasburgh, his heirs and assigns for ever, all equity to redeem, in case of failure of payment. There was no covenant to pay principal or interest. After the five years had elapsed, J. Tasburgh filed a bill in Ireland against Sir J. Eustace, praying payment or foreclosure. Sir J. Eustace did not appear to the bill, but stood out process of contempt; and a decree was made for foreclosure, unless the principal, interest, and costs, were paid in December, 1689. Sir J. Eustace died in 1706, without questioning the decree. In 1723, upon a bill filed by the heirs of Sir J. Eustace, charging that the decree was obtained by surprise and fraud, a decree for redemption was made; but that decree was reversed in the House of Lords. The case is certainly, as Mr. Coote observes, no great authority either way; but the above statement of it shews, that Mr. Coote did not mean to take any distinction between the case put by him, in the above extract, of a contract by a mortgagee with the mortgagor, at the time of the loan, for the absolute purchase of the land for a specific sum on default in payment at the appointed time, and the general case of a sale, subject to a contemporaneous proviso for re-purchase on certain terms. To use either the word "mortgage" or "sale" is, in fact, to beg the question, which is, whether the transaction is a sale or a mortgage. On principle, it seems to be immaterial, whether the bargain is regarded as a sale that may become converted into a mortgage, or a mortgage that may become converted into a sale; supposing, in both cases, that the one material ingredient of a mortgage, strictly so called, is absent, namely, a present subsisting debt.

In a subsequent page, Mr. Coote says: "It has been already mentioned, that a mortgage cannot be a mortgage on one side only; it must be mutual; that is, if it be a mortgage with one party, it must be a mortgage with both. The reverse of this was formerly attempted to be established, viz. that it must be a mortgage with both, or with neither; so that, it was argued, none could come to redeem, if the mortgagee could not compel the payment of the mortgage; but the former is the true principle."

It will appear, however, in the sequel, that the latter is the true principle. But, to conclude our extracts from Mr. Coote. After noticing, that there is an exception where the mortgage is made to a relation, so that it can be presumed that a benefit in the nature of a family settlement was intended; (see Newcomb v. Bonham, 2 Vent. 364; King v. Bromley, 2 Eq. Ab. 595); and observing, that a sale cannot, by subsequent agreement, be converted into a mortgage to the original purchaser, Mr. Coote has only these words on the general subject of this paper: "It may be further remarked, that the circumstance of an agreement to re-convey, although entered into at the time of conveyance, is not sufficient to convert the transaction into a mortgage, if there be evidence to rebut the presumption; (Sabine v. Barrell, 1 Vern. 268); and further, that an estate redeemable may be rendered irredeemable by evidence of title, as where (Perry v. Marston, 2 Bro. C. C. 397) copyholds were surrendered by way of mortgage, and, by a second surrender, the mortgagor limited them to himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the mortgagee in fee; and although the words 'subject to the trusts of the former surrender' were added, yet the court refused redemption, and considered the words to mean, 'subject to the preceding life estates*.'"

But little more satisfaction is to be obtained from the authorities than from the text writers. Of the numerous cases in which the question was involved, the greater part were decided upon special circumstances, and may be passed over. There are cases, however, which, if uncontradicted, would seem to establish, that, under all circumstances, a sale, with a contemporaneous stipulation for re-purchase within a limited time, must be considered as a mortgage. Thus, in Fulthorpe v. Foster, (1 Vern. 476), a tenant for life and her son, who had the inheritance, conveyed a property, (chiefly mines, the profits of which were subject to fluctuation), worth on an average 13*l.* per annum, to the defendant for 90*l.* The conveyance was absolute, and the defendant was put into possession; but a stipulation was made, that, if the son should pay the money at the end of ten years, the property should be re-conveyed. No other facts are stated in the report; and, upon a bill filed for redemption, (apparently within the ten years), it was held, that the defendant was not entitled to retain the rents, but only to interest, thus, in effect, deciding that he was a mortgagee. Again, in Manlove v. Bale, (2 Vern. 84), an absolute conveyance of a renewable lease for lives was made in consideration of 550*l.*; but, by a separate deed, the purchaser agreed to re-convey, if the vendor should pay him 600*l.* within a year. After the lapse of nearly twenty years, and two renewals by the purchaser, redemption was decreed. In Spurgeon v. Collier, (2 Eden, 55), the facts were these: P. T., being seised of an estate subject to a mortgage for 1000*l.*, the defendant C. offered to advance 200*l.* more to him, and to pay off the mortgage. An absolute conveyance was accordingly executed in 1736; but, by an indenture of even date, C. covenanted to re-convey, on payment of 1200*l.* during their joint lives; and it was agreed, that P. T. should be tenant of the premises at the rent of 70*l.* In 1737, P. T., being in arrear for rent, was arrested, and carried to prison by C., and then removed to the house of one Carr, where C. endeavoured to get from him the deed of defeazance, but without success.

* In the former surrender, the re-surrender was directed to be to such uses as the mortgagor should direct.

After P. T.'s death, C. obtained the deed from the son of P. T. Lord Keeper Henley decreed a redemption, observing, "The policy of this court is not more complete in any part of it than in its protection of mortgages. As a general rule for that purpose, a mortgage, once redeemable, continues so till some act is done afresh by the mortgagor to extinguish the redemption; and a man will not be suffered, in conscience, to fetter himself with a limitation or restriction of his time of redemption. It would ruin the distressed and unwary, and give unconscionable advantage to greedy and designing persons. It is said by the Attorney-General, that this was a purchase ab initio; and yet he admits, that, during the joint lives, the land might have been redeemed, on payment of principal and interest and having an account of rent. But if, in any case, the redemption could have been confined to a period, yet, I think, in this case, the conduct of the defendant would, in a court of equity, have rendered the right of redemption absolute, as C. prevented his exercising the limited right stipulated for by fraud, oppression, and imposition." The leaning of the Lord Keeper's mind was evidently against the validity of any contract whatever for a limited right of redemption.

Lastly, in the case of Williams v. Owen, (3 Jur. 1186; 10 Sim. 386), where Williams, a solicitor, executed an absolute conveyance of an estate in pursuance of a contract of sale, to the defendant Owen, in consideration of 550*l.*, consisting of a bond debt of 200*l.*, and cash paid at the time. The defendant paid the expenses of the conveyance, and entered into possession, having about the same time executed an agreement, that in case the plaintiff should, within a year, pay to the defendant the 550*l.*, and 13*l.*, being the expenses of the conveyance, the defendant would re-convey, being allowed to retain the rents in lieu of interest, if he should desire to do so. It did not clearly appear that the defeazance was executed at the same time as the conveyance, although it bore the same date. Sir L. Shadwell, V. C., decreed redemption, observing merely, "The agreement to redeem need not be made at the same time as the conveyance, as appears from the judgment of Sir W. Grant, M. R.; (Serier v. Greenway, 19 Ves. 413); and, if that decision be right I am bound by it, and I do not see how I can avoid deciding that the plaintiff in this case is entitled to redeem."

Now it had never been disputed, that if the purchase was originally absolute, an independent agreement to re-convey on certain terms, would not convert it into a mortgage; (see Coote, 38; Davis v. Thomas, 1 Russ. & My. 506); and the case of Serier v. Greenway, relied upon by the Vice-Chancellor, appears to be a distinct authority against his Honor's decision. There, in 1799, the defendant, who had taken an assignment of a mortgage, purchased the equity of redemption from the mortgagor, subject to a proviso for re-purchase within two years, on payment of the purchase-money and unlawful interest*. Some months afterwards the plaintiff and defendant executed an agreement, authorizing the latter to expend money in repairs, and charging the sums to be expended with interest, on the premises; in short, treating the relation between the parties in all respects as that of mortgagor and mortgagee; and on that ground Sir W. Grant decreed redemption: but he said, "If this had rested upon the conveyance of 1799, I do not see why it should be considered otherwise than as a sale."

On the other hand, the general principle, that a sale, subject to a proviso for re-purchase within a limited time, is not necessarily a mortgage, was affirmed, and a redemption after the time refused in the following cases:—Bonham v. Newcomb, (1 Vern. 84, 214, 232; 2 Vent. 265); Barrell v. Sabine, (1 Vern. 268); Ends-worth v. Griffiths, (16 Vin. Abr. 468; 2 Eq. Abr. 595);

* Unless the transaction was a mortgage, this was not usurious.

Mellor v. Lees, (2 Atk. 494); Cotterell v. Purchase, (Cas. tem. Talb. 61); Goodson v. Grierson, (2 B. & B. 274); Verner v. Winstanley, (2 S. & L. 392); and lastly, the case of Williams v. Owen being brought before Lord Cottenham, upon appeal, that distinguished judge reversed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, and founded his judgment upon principles which he placed in so clear and satisfactory a light, that they will never again be lost sight of. His Lordship said, (5 Jur. 114):—"That this court will treat a transaction as a mortgage, although it was made so as to bear the appearance of an absolute sale, if it appears that the parties intended it to be a mortgage, is no doubt true; but it is equally clear, that if the parties intended an absolute sale, a contemporaneous agreement for a re-purchase, not acted upon, will not of itself entitle the vendor to redeem. From the case of Barrell v. Sabine, (1 Vern. 268), this appears to have been recognised as a well-known rule of equity about 150 years ago. The question always is, was the original transaction a bona fide sale, with a contract for a re-purchase, or was it a mortgage in the form of a sale? In Mellor v. Lees, (2 Atk. 495), Lord Hardwicke puts the case thus as to the contract: 'whether it is a transaction, that is in its nature a mortgage, or a defeasible purchase, and subject to a re-purchase?' In Goodman v. Grierson, (2 Ball & B. 279), Lord Mansfield puts the case upon the same ground, and says, the fair criterion by which the court is to decide whether this deed is a mortgage or not, I apprehend to be this: Are the remedies mutual and reciprocal? Has the defendant all the remedies a mortgagee is entitled to? Tried by this test, there could be no doubt but that in this case the transaction was not a mortgage. In Ensworth v. Griffiths, (5 Bro. P. C. 184), the relation of a mortgagor and mortgagee had existed, and the mortgagor, in consideration of the debt, and of a further sum paid, released the equity of redemption, and at the same time the mortgagee signed an agreement to re-convey the premises upon payment of the two sums within one year. In the Exchequer there was a decree for redemption, but that was reversed, and the bill dismissed in the House of Lords. Devis v. Thomas (1 Russ. & My. 506) was very similar in circumstances, and the same principle was acted upon. In Sevier v. Greenwood, (19 Ves. 412), Sir W. Grant said, that if the case had rested upon the conveyance of November, 1799, possession being taken, he did not see why it should be considered otherwise than as a sale. The transaction of 1799 was an absolute conveyance as to a purchaser, with a proviso for re-conveyance to the apparent vendor, upon payment of the purchase-money within two years. Subsequent instruments between the parties described the premises as standing upon mortgage, and upon that Sir W. Grant decreed a redemption". Trying this case by the principle so long established, and settled upon such high authority, what is there to shew that this transaction was in its origin a mortgage, and not a sale under certain conditions for a re-purchase? If the transaction was a mortgage, there must have been a debt; but how could Owen have compelled payment? It appears also, that he, as a purchaser, paid for the conveyance, and was at all events to be at liberty to keep the rents. There was, indeed, the want of many circumstances, which in other cases have been thought necessary to give to a purchase the character of a mortgage, and no proof of any intention having existed that it should be so considered. In Baker v. Wind, (1 Ves. sen. 163), relied upon by the plaintiff, it was proved, that the parties had throughout treated the transaction as a mortgage, and had made it assume the appearance of a purchase, to deceive the creditors of the mortgagor. I am, for these reasons, and upon these authorities, of opinion, that the plaintiff has not established any title to redeem, or to enforce the contract for a re-purchase, and that the case attempted of fraud has wholly failed, and the bill ought to have been dismissed with costs."

It is singular, that Lord Cottenham in his judgment should have taken no notice of the cases cited above, in which the principle which he has so clearly laid down was not regarded; but as the weight and number of the authorities in favour of his Lordship's doctrine considerably exceed those of the cases opposed to it, we may safely regard the law as finally settled on this point.

In conclusion, we would animadvert, if we can do so without committing a breach of taste or decorum, on the very reprehensible indolence and neglect of many of the regular reporters—especially those of the equity courts. The tardiness of one of the Chancery reporters has, by long sufferance, almost grown into an authorized abuse; and, indeed, has been justified on the ground, that, by the delay, the reporter is enabled to ascertain whether any of the cases of which he has taken notes are overruled, and so to save his subscribers the burthen of paying for so much bad law; but the same excuse will not, at any rate, serve those gentlemen who report the superior court, whose backwardness in the performance of the duty which they have undertaken, and in which dispatch is of essential importance, is quite unpardonable. The particular instance, that has called forth these remarks, is afforded by the above-cited case of Williams v. Owen, which was decided by the late Lord Chancellor in November, 1840, and was reported in THE JURIST in February, 1841, but has not yet been reported in what, at one time, was considered the only authentic form, although a new part of the Chancery Reports appeared but a few days ago; so that in the ordinary course of publication, it may be expected, if at all, in next Michaelmas Term, or at Christmas. Nor is this a singular instance; almost every case, so far as its seeing the light depended on those gentlemen's exertions alone, would remain for as long a time in obscurity. Thus, the important judgment of Lord Cottenham in Tullett v. Armstrong, which was delivered on the 22nd January, 1840, and was published at length in THE JURIST on the 25th of the same month, did not appear in the "regular" reports of the court until March 1841. Of course we do not object to being left so long in undisputed possession of the field, but we think that the profession has some ground for complaint.

LONDON, JUNE 18, 1842.

A DISCUSSION took place a few nights ago in the House of Lords on the subject of the alleged rejection, on a late trial in Scotland, of a proposed witness, as being inadmissible, or at least not credible, on the ground of atheistical opinions. It was said in that discussion, that, instead of being put into the witness box, and asked whether he was then an atheist, he was in effect put forthwith on his trial for blasphemy, witnesses being examined to establish the fact of his atheism, by proving statements which he had antecedently made, and which were inconsistent with a belief in God. After this, it is said, that the witness was himself examined as to his belief, and that he then declared his belief in God, in a future state of rewards and punishments, and in fact in those fundamental dogmas, a belief in which is held necessary to make a witness competent; that he was then put on his oath to give his testimony, but was afterwards, before his testimony was taken, further examined as to his religious belief by the court; and his answers not being fully satisfactory, the court intimated, directly or indirectly, that he could not be believed, and that the counsel had better not proceed to examine him. From the conflicting statements made by the noble and learned Lords who took part in the discussion, it is not easy to collect what was the actual course of proceeding adopted in the trial referred to; and whether that stated above, if it really took place, was according to the law of Scotland, we do not assume to determine. The whole question seems to have been as to the propriety of the mode of ascertaining the fact of the witness's religious belief, viz. whether extrinsic evidence of his irreligious opinions could be admitted, and at what stage, or whether the witness himself should have been asked as a preliminary question, as to his belief, and whether, having answered it, all other evidence ought not to have been shut out.

Of the rules of our own law there can be but little doubt. It is undoubtedly necessary, that, to render a witness's testimony admissible, he should believe in the existence of a God. This maxim seems perfectly supported by reason as well as by law, for as the whole efficacy of an oath, having regard to its form, depends on this, that the party taking it pledges himself to speak the truth as a condition of his expecting the Divine assistance, so it would be ridiculous to suppose, that a witness could be induced to speak the truth by so pledging himself, if he did not believe in the existence of the Being whose assistance he invokes by his oath, the condition of his speaking the truth. But as the religious belief requisite to support the competency of a witness is his religious belief at the time when he is about to give his testimony, and as the fact whether such belief then exists or not is one of which no human being can by possibility have a knowledge, except the witness himself, our law limits the means of ascertaining the fact of the witness's belief in a God to inquiries of the witness himself, and that at the very moment when he is going to be sworn, though, if then omitted, it may properly be asked afterwards. Whether this extremely liberal rule of law is a prudent or rational one may admit of some doubt; for it must be observed, that it rests on a mere affirmation of the truth of the particular fact, viz. the belief of the witness, without the establishment of which his subsequent testimony on oath cannot be admitted. It might, therefore, be very reasonable, at least when there is any doubt suggested, to require this preliminary fact to be supported by corroborative evidence before proceeding to swear the witness. But admitting it to be perfectly consistent with sound reasoning, that the fact of the witness's belief in a God should be inquired of him alone, yet it does not seem quite so clear, that in reference to every religious denomination admitting, or purporting to admit the belief of a God, all extrinsic evidence in explanation of the nature of that religious belief which the witness admits, should be excluded. And although we are fully aware that we shall expose ourselves to the censure of an enlightened age by the confession we are about to make, yet we do confess an impression, that in point of strict reasoning, our law is on this subject somewhat lax; and that if the older authorities, which appear to have held that all heathens were excluded from giving evidence, are not very liberal, they are perhaps more consistent with the legal principles on which the competency depending on religious belief rests, than the modern well-established rule, that it is sufficient if the witness, whether a Christian, Jew, Mahomedan, or other person not a Christian, declares his belief in a God. "It is necessary," says Mr. Phillippa, "in order that a witness's testimony should be received, that he should believe in the existence of a God, by whom truth is enjoined and falsehood punished. Without such a belief, one sanction which the law regards as a material security for the truth of evidence, that of the fear of Divine punishment invoked by the witness upon himself, is wanting." (p. 11). This is undoubtedly the principle, but its application may have very different consequences, when considered with reference to a witness professing the Christian, or even perhaps the Jewish religion, and when considered with reference to heathen creeds. When the witness professes the Christian or Jewish religion, the court has itself judicial knowledge of the creeds to which the witness submits himself; and therefore, when the witness says that he believes in God according to the Old or New Testament, he admits (whether falsely or truly it matters not, because it is impossible to ascertain,) that belief which, within the knowledge of the judge, supports the stringency of the oath administered to him. But if a Hindu or a Mahomedan asserts his belief in God, what judicial knowledge has the judge, (who though he may be personally acquainted with the dogmas of Hinduism or Mohammedanism, does not, as judge, know anything of the matter)? what judicial knowledge we say is there? what guarantee is afforded that the witness is asserting that he believes in a God, who, according to his belief, enjoins truth, and punishes falsehood? In such cases, at least, we confess it appears to us, that it would not be an imprudent rule of law to admit collateral evidence of the nature of the witness's creed, as without it the court is wholly at the mercy of the witness.

The Scotch Law, it is said, admits collateral evidence in proof of the witness's disbelief in a God, and the proceedings at the trial referred to in the House of Lords recently seem to shew that such was the opinion of the Court in that case. The books of the Scotch Law on evidence seem to preserve on this point a remarkable silence, so far as any positive statement of the practice. But it might be inferred from their practice, (independently of what took place on the trial alluded to), in respect to what is termed in Scotch Law, "purgation of partial counsel," that extrinsic evidence would also be admitted to prove the absence of religious belief in the witness. "All witnesses," says Erskine, (Inst. book 4, p. 982), "must, before they make oath, be purged of partial counsel, that is, they must depose that they can neither lose nor gain by the event of the suit, nor have given advice how to conduct it; that they have not been taught how to swear; that they have got no bribe, nor promise of bribe or good deed, from any of the parties; and that they bear no enmity or ill will to either of them. These particulars, because they are put to the witness previous to his making oath, are styled 'initialia testimonii.' If a party bring present evidence of a witness's partial counsel in any of the above points, the examination cannot proceed, though the witness should offer to purge himself by oath. But bare expressions of ill will, when the enmity hath not been pushed forth into action, is not sufficient to stop the examination."

Now, as to the receiving a bribe or being instructed, these, it is true, are facts not resting exclusively on the knowledge of the witness; but the fact of ill will at the time of giving evidence, when founded on evidence of parol actions of ill will, can only be inferred, and rests precisely on the same ground as the fact of religious belief. The application of the principle to the incapacity depending on ill will would seem to justify its application to that depending on deficiency of religious belief.

And Taft (Evidence, p. 401) says, without making any exception as to the particular inadmissibility arising from defect of religious belief, that "an objection to the admissibility of a witness may also ordinarily be proved by other witnesses, if omni exceptioni majores, either instantly produced before the witness is examined, or afterwards in a process of reprobator."

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PRACTICE OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

To Attorneys and Solicitors.

55, Chancery-lane, 9th April, 1842.

FOR the convenience of persons in the Western and Central Districts of London, and particularly of Gentlemen connected with the Law, THE LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY have opened a Branch Office at 55, Chancery-lane, where Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information connected with the business of the Company, may be procured; and where Examinations of Parties whose Lives are proposed for Assurance may be taken, and Policies effected, as at the Chief Office of the Company, in Charlotte-row, Mansion-house.

Your attention is solicited to some of the distinguishing features of this Company, which have been introduced after mature deliberation, and which will be most conveniently pointed out by referring to Policies, as Money Transaction and Family Provision Policies.

MONEY TRANSACTION POLICIES.—Your professional experience and acquaintance with the records of the Courts of Law and Equity, must have convinced you that considerable changes were required in the practice and rules of Life Offices, to render this class of Policies valid and unimpeachable documents of security, which no unforeseen circumstances or future accidents could invalidate. This Company has endeavoured, and they think successfully, to render their Policies as indefeasible and negotiable securities as is possible, consistently with a due regard to the safety of the contracting parties; and to effect this object the Company has introduced the following clause into their Deed of Settlement:—

CLAUSE 78.—"That every Policy issued by the Company shall be indefeasible and indisputable, and the fact of the issuing of the same shall be conclusive evidence of its validity; and it shall not be lawful for the Company to delay payment of the money assured thereby, on the ground of any error, mistake or omission, however important, made by or on the part of the person or persons effecting the same; and that, on the contrary, the amount receivable under the same shall be paid at the time stipulated by the Policy, to the person entitled thereto, as if no such error, mistake or omission had been made or discovered, unless the Policy shall have been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation."

FAMILY PROVISION POLICIES.—In the well-founded belief that Life Assurance business is profitable, persons making provisions for their families, and contemplating a long duration of time between the date of the Policy and the claim to arise under it, generally prefer Assurances which may carry with them a right to participate in the profits to be realized by the Company during the currency of their Policies. By the Deed of Constitution of this Company, the participating Assured are entitled to the WHOLE OF THE MUTUAL PROFITS, as if they had been Assured in a purely Mutual Society; and they have, at the same time, the security not only of the Funds of the Company, arising from the accumulated premiums, but also the proprietary funds and subscribed Capital of the Company. To the Shareholders are allotted only those profits which are realized by the investment of their own paid capital, and from the excess of the premiums derived from the Non-participating Assurances. This mode of Division of Profits is peculiar to this Company.

In order to provide against the defeat of a Policy in the hands of a CREDITOR, by the DEBTOR, whose Life is Assured leaving the country, and going beyond the prescribed limits, the Company grant WHOLE WORLD POLICIES, whereby, on condition of receiving an extra premium, varying in amount according to the circumstances of the case, but fixed and determined at the time of issuing the Policy, the debtor, on whose Life an Assurance has been effected, is entitled to go to or reside in any part of the world, without invalidating the Assurance.

To enable a party to effect an Assurance at the LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, and to entitle him to discontinue it at a less sacrifice than by any other plan, a seven years' Half-premium system has been introduced; and, upon comparing the following scale with any other which has been devised for reducing present payments, it will be seen how much more economically a loan transaction can be fortified by this kind of Policy than by any other. The Half-premium system possesses a further advantage over temporary Assurances, or those for a Term of Years, from the Assured having the option of continuing for Life the Policy which he may have procured for a mere temporary purpose.

LONDON, JUNE 25, 1842.

A REPORT has just been published by one of the learned reporters in the Court of Queen's Bench, of the very important decision in "*The Queen v. The South-Western Railway Company." The question in dispute was the mode of assessing to the poor-rate a Railway Company, in occupation of its own railway, as carriers thereon;—whether the rate should be levied with reference to the rent, which, calculating it on the basis of the net annual value obtained from the statement of the tolls, it might be assumed that a tenant would give for the lease of the tolls only; or with reference to the rent, which, calculating it on the basis of the net annual value derived by the Company from the use of the railway for carrying passengers &c., it must be assumed that a tenant would give for the use of the railway, both as to the tolls and for the purpose of carrying on business on it as a carrier, finding power, carriages, &c. The decision of the Court is in favour of taking the latter mode of estimating the rent as the basis of the assessment. The decision therefore takes this ground, that the profit made by a Railway Company by the use of its land, buildings, and machinery, not merely as owners of the land, and of the right of taking toll, but as traders carrying on a business by the use of the land, the buildings, and the machinery, is to be, for the purpose of ascertaining the rent on which the poor-rate is to be assessed, the measure of the annual value of the Company's property in the railway. A doctrine which seems very much like saying, that, in determining the imaginary rent on which the poor-rate is to be assessed, one element of the calculation is to be the value of the goodwill of the Company's business, and the profit due to their skill and exertion in the carrying on of such business.

It is stated in the preface to the report of The Queen v. The South-Western Railway Company, that it is understood the Company would gladly take the opinion of a Court of Error upon the decision; but that, from the mode in which the question arose, (a case from the quarter sessions), it is impossible for them to do so.

Affecting as it does property of immense extent, and in a way which, however consistent it may be with authority and legal reasoning, is not very consistent with the modern principles of trade, it is not indeed likely that the general principle laid down in the case of The Queen v. The South-Western Railway Company will be acquiesced in without some further judicial investigation. And we therefore venture to offer some comments upon it, notwithstanding the weight unquestionably due to it as the decision of the whole court, in a case fully argued by some of the most able men at the bar.

In stating above what we conceive to be the practical principle laid down by this case, we wish not to be understood as meaning to say, that the Court affected to proceed on that principle, but only that the principle appears to us to be substantially contained in and inseparable from the decision. The Court itself appears to have put its judgment on this—that the trade of a Railway Company carrying on its own line, being inseparably connected with their buildings and lands; being a trade which could have no existence without the buildings and lands; but for which the buildings would not have been erected or occupied; and for the sake of which, in a great measure, the lands are themselves occupied in a particular manner;—the profits of the trade affect the value of the lands and buildings with regard to the rent obtainable, and, therefore, they ought to be taken into account in estimating the rent on which the rate is to be assessed. (See pp. 21 et seq.)

In following out this view, the Court took notice of two cases in particular, which it appeared to consider as similar in their elements to the case of the Railway Company.

* Report of the case of The Queen v. The South-Western Railway Company, decided in the Court of Queen's Bench, June 4, 1842. By C. J. Gale, Esq., Barrister at Law. [S. Sweet.

The first was The King v. St. Nicholas, (Cald. 262), in which a steelyard, part of a machine in a street leading by a house, was in the house; and sums were paid by persons for weighing their waggons and carts; but those persons were not obliged so to weigh them. The profits arising from the use of the steelyard and weighing-machine were included in the rate of the house, on this ground, according to Lord Mansfield, that "the principal purpose of the house was for weighing; the steelyard was the most valuable part of the house." And Willes, J., put this case: "If a billiard-table stand in a house, and the house should, in respect of such table, let at a higher sum, it is ratable while the table continues there, and it is so let at the advanced rent."

The second case is The King v. Bradford, (4 M. & S. 317), in which the Court held, that the rent of a house having a licence to sell liquors to the occupants of a barrack, being increased in value by reason of the licence enabling the occupier to earn profits by his trade, the increase so due to the profits of the trade must be taken into account in assessing the poor's rate.

On the first of these cases, it is to be observed, that the decision proceeded on the ground, that the engine, from the use of which profit was derived, was part of the house. It was annexed to it, let with it, and constituted as much part of that, for the use of which rent, in the strictest sense of the term "rent," would be paid, as a stable or other subordinate building attached to a dwelling-house forms part of it, and enters into the composition of its rent. And the case put by Willes, J., is open to precisely the same observation. In the second case, (The King v. Bradford), the nature of the circumstances seems this—that there was a house, which quâ house merely would have been worth a given rent. The vicinity of a barrack simply, would not have increased the value of that rent, neither would the mere presence of the occupants of the barrack. But a licence being given to sell in that house liquors, then its value became increased, because it became the instrument of a lucrative trade. The ground therefore of the increased value in that case was not anything depending on the application of skill or capital by the occupant of the house, but the circumstance of there being annexed to the enjoyment of the house a licence to carry on a certain trade. Now, if we compare the circumstances of these cases with those of a Railway Company, we apprehend that we shall find very considerable practical differences. In the case of the Railway Company, the profits made by the carrying trade of the proprietors do not arise by virtue of the mere possession of the lands or buildings, or of any special and exclusive licence or power in them to carry on that trade, but by virtue of the proprietors bringing on the railroad locomotive and other machinery, and conducting by the application of personal skill and capital the business of conveying passengers and goods. The mere existence of the land, the rails, the stations, and buildings, would not and could not of itself bring carrying trade to the proprietors, but only profit by way of tolls paid by other carriers; and their profits as carriers are wholly irrespective of the circumstance of their being also owners of the road, whereas in the two cases referred to, of the weighing-engine and canteen, the profit depended principally if not entirely on the ownership or exclusive enjoyment of the weighing-engine and the licence to sell liquors.

The result of these differences between the nature of the circumstances in the case of a Railway Company carrying on its own line, and in cases of the character of those relied upon by the Court in Reg. v. The South Western Railway Company, may not be sufficient to meet the legal reasoning on which that case has been decided. But it is sufficient to shew how very different will be the effect of such a decision upon trading operations in regard to a Railway Company, and in regard to the other class of cases. In the latter, the principle of rating according to the estimated increase of rents depending on the use of a particular adjunct to the premises, goes only to abstract from the occupant the excess of profit which he would otherwise reap, not from his own application of capital and skill, but from the fortuitous presence of a particular qualification to his house. But this principle, as laid down and applied in Reg. v. The South-Western Railway Company, mixes together the profits derivable from tolls which grow purely and simply out of the railway, quâ railway, with the profits derivable from the carrying trade, in respect of which it must always be difficult to say what portion of them is due to the mere fact of the railway affording facility for carrying on the particular trade of conveying goods and passengers, and what portion of them arises out of the skill and energy and capital of the proprietors. And it has in consequence this effect—that the rating to the relief of the poor will increase directly as the trade of the Company increases. In other words, the exertion of greater skill and the application of greater capital will be rewarded by an increase of burthen. The Court appears to have considered itself throughout pressed by the difficulty of separating, where a Company is itself the carrier on its own line, the profits due to the tolls from the profits arising out of the payments for transit; "If, said the Court, (alluding to the observation of Lord Ellenborough in The King v. Bradford), we deal with this case in the same sensible and just way, we shall be at no loss to see that to break up this entire line into parochial portions, and then in imagination sever all and each from the building which the occupiers occupy together with it, de facto exclusively and under the authority of the same statutes passed in furtherance of one great scheme; and then again in imagination to sever both from the traffic which the occupiers carry on, in, by, and throughout the whole, de facto exclusively, and for the sake of which they have made, built, and occupy the whole, is to apply the principle of the statute in form and not in substance, and so to lead to a mere evasion of its object." (p. 27). But the reasoning adopted in order to get over this difficulty appears open to an objection of a different kind, viz. that it leads to a rating of railways when the carrying trade is, as it usually is, in the hands of the proprietors, very different from what it would be if the tolls only were in the hands of the proprietors, and the trade in other hands. It is not contended, that, in the latter case, a railway could be rated at a higher rate than that due to the profits of the tolls alone, or that the carriers could be rated in respect of their carrying. But if the proprietors and the carriers are the same persons, then the ruling is to include the profits of the trade as well as the computed profits of the tolls. It may be difficult, certainly, in contending against the decision in Reg. v. The South-Western Railway Company, to get over the circumstance that the right of exclusivity, or even concurrently using a railway for trade, would procure in fact a higher rent than could be obtained merely for the tolls; but it seems equally difficult in support of it, to shew why, if carriers on a railway, being strangers, are not liable to a rate, carriers being also the proprietors should be so liable.

We have been asked, whether a warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem in ejectment, is within the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, so as to require attestation by the defendant's attorney. The answer we believe is, that a warrant of attorney in ejectment is valid without such attestation; but that a cognovit actionem in ejectment must be attested. The 9th section commences in these words: "Be it enacted, that from and after the time appointed for the commencement of this act, no warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action, or cognovit actionem, given by any person, shall be of any force, unless &c." In applying this absurd enactment, the judges have very properly adopted a strict and literal interpretation, and have held that it extends to warrants of attorney in personal actions, and to cognovits generally; such being the literal import of the clause in question. (Doe d. Kingston v. Kingston, 6 Jur. 105; 1 Dowl. P. C., N. S. 263; Doe d. Rees v. Howell, 4 Jur. 1035).

Mr. W. Patten in pursuance of notice brought under the consideration of the House the standing order which imposes on the promoters of railways the necessity of giving public notices in the months of February and March instead of October and November, the period fixed for other bills. The object of that order had been to protect landowners from an improper interference with their property, and to give due security, before railway bills were brought forward, that sufficient capital was subscribed to proceed with the plan. There was however no longer any necessity for this precaution, because men of capital were now always ready to join in these undertakings, and because the vigilance of Parliament operated sufficiently to check futile speculations in railways. The order had this bad effect, that it compelled parties to make their surveys in the winter, when they could scarcely arrive at correct conclusions, instead of in the months of June and July, the most favourable months for such operations. The hon. member moved to repeal so much of the standing order as imposed on the promoters of railway bills the necessity of giving public notices in the months of February and March, instead of the months of October and November. — Motion agreed to.

Sir J. Graham introduced a bill to encourage the establishment of District Courts and Prisons; also a bill to amend the law concerning Prisons.

LONDON, JULY 2, 1842.

IN the 8th volume of Meeson & Welsby's Reports, our readers will find two important decisions of the Court of Exchequer (Gibson v. Carruthers, p. 321, and Battham v. Drake, p. 346) on a subject of great practical interest—the right of the assignees of a bankrupt to sue on contracts made with him before the bankruptcy; and as these cases are deserving of attention, we shall make some observations upon them in our present Number. Under the 63rd section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, all the present and future personal estate of a bankrupt, and all debts due to him, are assigned and rendered recoverable by the assignees. The above words comprise all rights of action for injuries to personal chattels, and breaches of contract relative to the personal estate of the bankrupt, whereby it is prevented from coming to the hands of the assignees, or is diminished in value. (Hancock v. Caffyn, 8 Bing. 358). The latter of the cases we have referred to, shews the nature of the contracts for a breach of which a right of action does not pass to the assignees; and that we shall first consider. The contract there was, that the defendants, who were printers, would employ the plaintiff as their foreman for a certain number of years at a fixed salary. Having refused to do this, the plaintiff brought an action against them for the breach of the contract; and one of the pleas was the bankruptcy of the plaintiff. On the case coming before the Court of Exchequer upon a demurrer to the above plea, the learned Judges of that Court decided, that the right of action upon such a contract did not pass to the assignees. Baron Parke, in delivering the judgment of the Court, uses these words—"There would be no difficulty in saying, therefore, that actions for breaches of such contracts as relate to the person simply, would not pass to the assignees. But suppose the result of a breach of contract relating to the person, to be a damage, not to the person only, but also to the personal estate; as, for instance, if in the case of negligent carriage or cure, there were consequential damage, that the plaintiff had expended his money, or had lost the profits of a business, or the wages of labour for a time; or suppose a joint contract to carry both the person and the goods, and both were injured, the executor probably might sue for a breach of such contract, and recover damages to the extent of the injury to the personal estate; and there is no other who could sue; but could the assignee of a bankrupt sue in any of these cases? Could the right of action on the contract be divided into two on the bankruptcy, and the bankrupt sue for one part, and the assignee for another?" Here then we have the difficulty. If we say that the right of action cannot be divided, we enable the bankrupt in one case to recover damages which properly belong to his creditors, and in the other we allow the assignees to recover and divide among the creditors money which is rightfully the bankrupt's. Numerous cases may be supposed in which the contract would relate partly to the person and partly to the goods. Suppose for instance a man to be possessed of a valuable patent, and to have great skill in the manufacture to which such patent related, and a contract to be made with him for permission to use the patent, and that he shall be employed at a certain salary to conduct the manufacture. The contractors refuse to employ the patentee, and thereupon he becomes a bankrupt. Who is to sue for the breach? It may happen, that the licence to use the patent is far more valuable than the services of the inventor, and if he is to have the damages for the breach, one of its most valuable parts is withdrawn from the estate; or it may be, that the patent could not be worked beneficially without the inventor's skill, and to hold that the assignees may sue, is to give them what properly belongs to him. The learned judge felt this difficulty, and observed, as to the right of action being divided, that "it might, perhaps, where the contract itself originally related to both." Perhaps therefore the law on this point may be thus stated: when the contract originally relates to the person of the bankrupt, although the breach of it has occasioned damage to his estate, he alone can sue; and if he has obtained his certificate, he will be entitled to retain the damages. Where originally it relates partly to the bankrupt's person and partly to his estates, it seems, he may recover damages in one action for so much of a breach as affects his person; and his assignees may in another action recover damages for so much as affects his estate. And thirdly, where the contract relates only to the estate of the bankrupt, the assignees are entitled to sue. This brings us to the other case we have mentioned, (Gibson v. Carruthers), in which Lord Abinger differed from the rest of the court; and we may at least say that the decision of the majority of the judges is open to some doubt. The contract in that case was, that the defendant should ship on board the buyer's vessel on its arrival at Odessa a certain quantity of linseed, the vessel to be chartered by the buyer, and the amount of the invoice to be paid on handing over it and the bill of lading to the buyer in London. The buyer having accordingly sent a vessel to Odessa, after its arrival there became bankrupt. Notice was given to the defendant, the seller, of the vessel's arrival, and he was requested by the agent of the assignees to ship the linseed, which he refused to do. And the assignees having brought an action against him for this refusal, he pleaded that they did not, within a reasonable time after the bankruptcy of the buyer, give notice of their intention to adopt the contract. This being demurred to, the majority of the judges decided, that the assignees were entitled to sue on the contract, although they had not within a reasonable time given notice of their intention to adopt it; Lord Abinger being of a contrary opinion. That the assignees might adopt such a contract, cannot, we think, be disputed; but there seems no good reason why they should not be obliged to give notice of their intention. One of the learned judges argued, that in cases where the bankrupt had partly performed the contract, if the assignees could not enforce it, his estate would sustain a loss. This, however, affords no ground for holding that the assignees shall not give notice. If it would be for the benefit of the estate that the contract should be adopted, it is more consistent with justice that the assignees shall at once declare their intention, than that the defendant shall be compelled to go on with the performance of his part of the contract, not knowing whether the assignees will accept or refuse it. The judges say that the assignees are only bound to fulfil the bankrupt's part of the engagement when the proper time arrives; and, therefore, in many cases, the other contracting party may have to perform the whole of his part, and at the last be left to his remedy against the bankrupt. In Gibson v. Carruthers, the defendant would have been obliged to send the cargo from Odessa to London, and incur a considerable expense before he could ascertain whether his goods would be taken by the assignees or sent back to him. Baron Parke supposes a case of "a contract to build a vessel for the bankrupt, he supplying a part of the timber and paying the price by instalments, the last on delivery, and the bankruptcy occur after the timber has been supplied, and some instalments paid, and before the vessel is complete;" and he asks whether it could be contended that the builder could refuse to complete his contract and render all the previous expense unavailing. Of course not; but suppose the case to be slightly varied and that the builder is to supply the timber and no money is to be paid until the completion of the vessel. Is it not more reasonable that the assignees should be obliged to declare at once whether they will accept the vessel when completed, than that they should be allowed to wait until that time, and the builder be compelled to go on with his work? There is a want of mutuality upon the whole, we think the learned judges, who seem to have been somewhat led away by the argument that the defendant's refusal to perform bore some analogy to the right of stoppage in transitu, did not sufficiently consider the question of the obligation on the assignees to signify their intention to adopt the contract; and, with all due submission to their authority we must doubt the correctness of that part of their decision.

ANNUAL RESTS AS BETWEEN MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE.

It is a subject of some importance and deserving of consideration, in what cases and upon what principles a court of equity will direct annual rests to be made in taking the accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee, where the latter has been in possession and receipt of the rents of the property mortgaged. What is ordinarily meant by making annual rests in these cases, is the annually applying the surplus of the rents received by the mortgagee, or payable by him in respect of his occupation of the premises, after satisfying his interest, in reduction of the principal money due on the mortgage. It is obvious that this is a mode of taking the accounts very disadvantageous in most cases to the mortgagee, a party somewhat favoured in a court of equity; and hence it is, that annual rests cannot be made by the Master unless a special direction for that purpose is contained in the decree or in some subsequent order of the court. (Webber v. Hunt, 1 Madd. 13). Judging from the reports of the earlier cases of Robinson v. Chumley, (2 Atk. 410), Gould v. Tansred, (2 Atk. 534), and some others, it would seem, that it was not in the time of Lord Hardwicke considered as an invariable rule that annual rests should be directed against a mortgagee in possession; but the doctrine on this subject, as explained and settled by later cases, was then involved in much uncertainty. In the case of Davis v. May, (Coop. 238, and 19 Ves. 383), which came before Sir W. Grant, M. R., in 1815, an attempt was made in a redemption suit, to charge the mortgagee with annual rests from the particular period of his possession at which the arrears of interest existing when he took possession were paid off, on the grounds that the mortgagee had been long in the receipt of the rents, and that the rents greatly exceeded the annual interest of the mortgage debt. Sir W. Grant refused to decree annual rests. He said, "The direction to take the account with rests is not of course. From the precedents of decrees that I have seen, I collect that the usual course is not to give that direction. There is no instance of a decree in the form now prayed, with rests from a particular period of the account when the arrear of interest was discharged. There are only two forms of decrees either with or without rests. Here the special circumstances are against such a direction, which it is admitted would be improper from the beginning of the account, while there was an arrear of interest." This case distinctly records the rule which has ever since been followed, that annual rests will not be directed, where it appears that there was an arrear of interest when the mortgagee took possession, even after the arrears were paid off, although the annual rents may, in amount, greatly exceed the interest. In the late cases of Latter v. Dashwood, (6 Sim. 462), and Finch v. Brown, (3 Beav. 70), this principle was directly recognised and acted upon. Where, however, the interest never was in arrear, and the annual rents exceed in amount the annual interest payable on the mortgage, in such a case the general rule appears to be for the court to direct the accounts to be taken against the mortgagee in possession, with rests. This was the course adopted in Shepherd v. Elliott, (4 Mad. 254); and it is understood to be the ordinary practice, except in certain special cases; as for instance, perhaps, where the excess of rent above the interest is very small. (Demoran v. Fricker, Jac. 168). And not only will the accounts be directed against a mortgagee in possession with rests, for the purpose of reducing the amount of his principal debt out of the rents, where there was no arrear of interest when he took possession, but it seems also to be a settled rule, that even if there was an arrear of interest when the possession commenced, still, if the amount of rents received by him exceeds his principal debt and interest, so as to discharge it, the account of rents will be directed against the mortgagee, with annual rests from the date of such discharge, and the Master will be ordered to charge him with interest on the balances from time to time in hand. From the period at which his debt is discharged, the mortgagee is considered to be a bare trustee of the mortgaged premises for the mortgagor, with whom he is bound to account, as having appropriated to his own use, and thus committed a breach of trust, money belonging to his cestui que trust. This relation of trustee and cestui que trust as between the satisfied mortgagee and his mortgagor, is construed to arise out of an implied contract on the part of the mortgagee to account to the mortgagor for the rents and profits received by him after his debt shall be paid off. This point came before Sir Thomas Plumer, V. C., in Quarrell v. Beckford, (1 Mad. 269). It appeared, by the Master's report in that case, that the debt was paid off on the 31st December, 1795; and his Honor ordered interest to be computed on the rents received from time to time by way of annual rests, not indeed from the date of the discharge of the debt, but from the period of filing the bill in the cause, which was a few months subsequent thereto, on the ground that that was the time when the first demand was made on the mortgagee by the parties entitled to the equity of redemption. The above decision was followed by Sir John Leach, in Wilson v. Macalfe, (4 Russ. 530), who directed an account to be taken with annual rests, not only of the rents and profits actually received by the mortgagee, but also of an occupation rent fixed by the Master, in respect of certain parts of the mortgaged premises occupied by the mortgagees themselves. He ordered, however, the account with rests to be taken from the period at which the debt was discharged, which was previously to the filing of the bill, and not as was directed in Quarrell v. Beckford from the filing of the bill. And it is apprehended that the practice is to direct the account with rests to be taken in such cases from the period at which the debt was paid off. And here we may also observe, that in taking the account with rests, where a mortgagee has received a large sum at a time intermediate between the dates for the annual rents, as ascertained by the date of the mortgage-deed, a rest should then be made, and the subsequent rests ought to be computed from that period. (Birmingham v. Harwood, 1 T. & R. 477).

In Wilson v. Cluer, (3 Beav. 138), Lord Langdale, M. R., carried the principle of making annual rests against a mortgagee in possession one step further. In that case it did not clearly appear whether there was an arrear of interest when the mortgagee entered into possession, but some years afterwards he came to a settled account with the mortgagor, by which all that was due to the mortgagee was agreed to be principal-money. The mortgagee having thus nothing remaining due to him for interest continued in possession of the premises, and the rents and profits in every year exceeded the annual interest on the principal sum ascertained to be due to him by the settled account. And his Lordship in a suit for redemption, directed annual rests to be made. He observed, "With some qualification perhaps it may be said to be a general rule not to direct annual rests to be made in the account of a mortgagee in possession when the interest is in arrear when he takes possession; and in the absence of any special reason, I conceive that if a mortgagee is not liable to account with annual rests when he enters into possession, he does not become so liable when the arrear of interest is paid off, or till after the whole of the mortgage-debt has been paid off by receipt of the rents, although from the time when the debt is ascertained to be paid off, annual rests will be decreed, though none were ordered previously." Having regard to the cases already noticed, we apprehend the doctrine stated by his Lordship is correct, with this exception, that we are not able to discover that the doctrine in question admits of any such qualification as the language used by him implies. His Lordship then proceeds as follows: "I am not aware of any case in which, although the mortgagee may have taken possession under circumstances which did not render him liable to account with annual rests, there was afterwards a settled account, by which it appeared either that no interest was due, or that any interest which was due was satisfied as interest by being converted into principal, and the mortgagee continued in the receipt of rents of amount more than sufficient to satisfy the interest of such principal. But it appears to me, that such settlement of account ought to be considered as a rest made by the parties themselves, and that the mortgagee continuing in possession after the statement of such an account, and with no interest due to him, must from that time be dealt with as a mortgagee who takes possession without any interest being in arrear."

Upon the whole, therefore, we may at present consider the following propositions established by authority—First, that if a mortgagee takes possession when there is an arrear of interest due to him, annual rests will not be directed for the purpose of reducing his principal debt, even after the arrear of interest is paid off, and though the amount of the rents and profits greatly exceeds that of his interest; secondly, that if there be no arrear of interest due when the mortgagee takes possession, and the rents and profits in amount greatly exceed the interest, he will be charged with rests for the purpose of reducing his principal debt; thirdly, that, after the debt is paid off out of the rents and profits, the account of rents and profits will be ordered against the mortgagee from the period of such payment, and that too though there was an arrear of interest when he took possession; fourthly, that if the mortgagee takes possession, there being an arrear of interest due to him, and afterwards he comes to a settled account with the mortgagor, by which all arrears of interest are converted into principal, and continues in possession after such settled account, he will be charged with rests for the purpose of reducing his principal debt.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, June 27.

Lord Denman moved the second reading of the Affirmation Bill. His Lordship observed, that the great object in courts of justice was to ascertain the truth, but by excluding the testimony of persons whose conscientious scruples forbade them to take an oath, that object was frustrated. His Lordship referred to the two numerous sects of Baptists and Independents as opposed to taking any oath. With regard to these persons, he said they were placed in a peculiarly hard position. If they refused to swear, they were liable to punishment; and if they did not, inasmuch as they were acting against their principles, they disparaged their own evidence. The objection to the present law was also, that it was inefficient for the purpose of excluding improper testimony, and only operated for the exclusion of honest testimony. If a man declared himself a Jew, a Quaker, or a Mahomedan, his oath or affirmation accordingly was taken. But a pretended religious scruple might be made to serve as an excuse for the exclusion of an unwilling witness.

The Bishop of London agreed with the noble Lord as to the hardship on many conscientious persons. But he thought the Bill objectionable, as the persons to be relieved in it were undefined; and this he thought would lead to the abrogation of oaths altogether.

On the suggestion at a later period of the Right Rev. Prelate, the motion for the second reading of the Bill was withdrawn, and the general subject of judicial oaths, and not merely the particular Bill, was referred to a committee up-stairs.

Tuesday, June 28.

The Perpetuation of Evidence Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Lord Chancellor said, with reference to the Justices' Jurisdiction Bill, that as some inconvenience might arise to the justices of the peace, owing to an Act lately passed for altering their jurisdiction, and which would come into operation in the middle of the Sessions, he begged to lay on the table a Bill for remedying this defect, and gave notice of motion for suspension of the standing orders, in order that the Bill might be passed without delay.

The Bill was brought in and read the first time.

Wednesday, June 29.

The Jurisdiction of Justices Bill was read a second time, and the standing orders having been suspended, the bill went through committee, was reported, and read a third time and passed.

Thursday, June 30.

The royal assent was given to the Jurisdiction of Justices Quarter Sessions Bill and the Agent and Factor Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, June 27.

The Stock in Trade Bill and the District Courts Bill were read a second time, and ordered to be committed on the 28th.

The Municipal Corporations Bill went through committee, and the report was received.

Wednesday, June 29.

Sir J. Graham introduced a bill to provide that the Justices' Jurisdiction Bill should not come into operation till the 15th of July, so as not to interfere with the present sittings of the quarter sessions.

The bill was read a first and second time, (the standing orders being dispensed with), and ordered to be committed on the 30th.

Thursday, June 30.

The Jurisdiction of Justices Amendment Bill was read a third time, and sent up to the Lords.

We regret to state that Sir Joseph Littledale died on Sunday last. His Lordship was born in 1767, and was raised to the Bench in April, 1824.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint George Aubert, Esq., to be her Majesty's Attorney-General in the Island of St. Lucia.

LONDON, JULY 9, 1842.

THE very ancient jurisdiction of the Justices of Sessions, which has for no inconsiderable time been tottering in the estimation of the public, has at length received an almost stunning blow at the hands of the Legislature. Originally, it seems, Justices of the Peace had powers almost co-extensive with those of the Judges. By 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, their Courts were to be constituted of "one Lord, with three or four of the most worthy, together with more learned in the law," and had power to take, arrest, and chastise offenders, and to hear and determine, at the King's suit, all manner of felonies and trespasses done in the county, according to the laws and customs of the realm. "This statute, according to Lord Holt, (Harcourt v. Fox, 1 Show. edit. Leach, 507), made them complete Judges; they were to have a commission; they had authority to hold a Court; and thereby they were Judges of a Court of Record;" and they have been since held to have jurisdiction to try generally felonies and trespasses, with some few exceptions. "In the result," says a learned author on this subject, "it appears that the Quarter Sessions have power to try all indictable offences, whether offences at common law, or created by statute; with the exception of treason, misprision of treason, præmunire, forgery, and perjury at common law, and, perhaps, usury." (Dickinson's Guide, edit. Talfourd, p. 130).

And although in practice scarcely any of the higher order of crimes are tried at Sessions, the Justices very judiciously confining in general the exercise of their jurisdiction to cases of simple larceny, and crimes not exceeding that class in extent; yet the jurisdiction, until the statute just passed, has subsisted, and has occasionally been exercised, and while it gave great dignity and importance to the Quarter Sessions, gave them also greater power of doing mischief.

Of the crimes over which the Courts of Quarter Sessions had jurisdiction, a great many, and some of those over which they exercised it in practice, are now taken from them by the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, intituled "An Act to define the Jurisdiction of Justices in General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace." The Act recites, "that it is expedient that the powers of Justices of General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace, with respect to the trial of offences, be better defined;" and then proceeds to enact, firstly, that "neither the Justices of the Peace acting in and for any county, riding, division, or liberty, nor the Recorder of any borough, shall at any Session of the Peace, or at any adjournment thereof, try any person or persons for any treason, murder, or capital felony, or for any felony which, when committed by a person not previously convicted of felony, is punishable by transportation beyond the seas for life, or for any of the following offences, that is to say,"

1. Misprision of treason.
2. Offences against the Queen's title, prerogative, person, or government, or against either House of Parliament.
3. Offences subject to the penalties of præmunire.
4. Blasphemy, and offences against religion.
5. Administering or taking unlawful oaths.
6. Perjury and subornation of perjury.
7. Making or suborning any other person to make a false oath, affirmation, or declaration, punishable as perjury or as a misdemeanor.
8. Forgery.
9. Unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to crops of corn, grain, or pulse, or to any part of a wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or to any heath, gorse, furze, or fern.
10. Bigamy, and offences against the laws relating to marriage.
11. Abduction of women and girls.
12. Endeavouring to conceal the birth of a child.

13. Offences against any provision of the laws relating to bankrupts and insolvents.

14. Composing, printing, or publishing blasphemous, seditious, or defamatory libels.

15. Bribery.

16. Unlawful combinations and conspiracies, except conspiracies or combinations to commit any offence which such justices or recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try when committed by one person.

17. Stealing or fraudulently taking, or injuring or destroying, records or documents belonging to any court of law or equity, or relating to any proceeding therein.

18. Stealing or fraudulently destroying or concealing wills or testamentary papers, or any document or written instrument being or containing evidence of the title to any real estate or any interest in lands, tenements, or hereditaments.

The 2nd and 3rd sections of the Act relate to the necessary powers to be given to the Judges of the Superior Courts, for effectually transferring to their jurisdiction the trial of crimes, the jurisdiction over which is taken from the Quarter Sessions by the Act, and the preliminary proceedings in respect of which have been instituted before the passing of the Act. The 4th section gives power to the Justices of the Peace to divide their Courts, so that where a chairman and deputy chairman are appointed, some of the justices may, with the assistance of the chairman, hear part of the business, while others, with the assistance of the deputy chairman, may hear other parts of the business.

It needs scarcely be observed, that this Act goes very far in reducing the jurisdiction of the Courts of Quarter Sessions, and must have the effect of very soon reducing them to the transaction, with a few exceptions, of comparatively trivial business. That the administration of Criminal Justice will be benefited by this transfer of a great part of the occupation of Courts of Session to the superior Courts is, we think, not very much to be doubted; the constitution of a Bench of County Magistrates being of such a nature as to render it, in the present state of the law, almost of its very nature incompetent to deal with all the graver classes of crime of a violent nature, in which, if not the life of the accused, at least his personal liberty for a lengthened period, is at stake; and also, with the whole class of cases of crime, involving in the question of its commission, investigations of law bordering upon the domain of the laws of property and of contract.

The mere absence of legal learning, which must characterise a body selected from among laymen, and that more on account of general respectability of character and personal importance in the county, than on account of predominant intellect, would be of itself no slight evil, where the business to be done is the determination of legal rights. But the absence of mere learning is perhaps even less pernicious than the absence of those judicial habits in the hearing of causes and the reception and application of evidence, which nothing but a long course of legal education and attendance upon courts can give. Persons not bred as lawyers find habitually a difficulty approaching almost to impossibility, in discharging from their minds all knowledge relating to the matter before them, except that which they acquire judicially from the evidence. Hence, probably, the frequent complaints of unjust and absurd decisions at Sessions. And hence, we apprehend, will the diminution of the extent of their jurisdiction meet with approbation at the hands of the Profession as well as of the public. There will still be quite enough of jurisdiction left to occupy those Courts to the full extent of their learning and legal fitness, and they will be at the same time relieved from the necessity of the self-condemning practice, of not venturing to exercise the larger and more important part of their jurisdiction.

With regard to the construction of the Act just passed, it is impossible but that an act effecting such great changes in so laconic a mode, should fail to open many points for doubt and discussion, or to have in some measure effects probably not intended. For instance: the sixteenth exception from the jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions is "unlawful combinations and conspiracies, except conspiracies or combinations to commit any offence which such Justices or Recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try, when committed by one person." We doubt not that the intention of this clause was to exclude the Quarter Sessions from trying a conspiracy for the commission of any offence, which of itself is in point of magnitude above the jurisdiction; but to permit them to try conspiracy for the commission of any offence, of itself of sufficiently trifling character to be within their jurisdiction. But this excluding clause will, we apprehend, have the effect of withdrawing from their jurisdiction a class of cases not falling within the ground of exclusion, and therefore not intended to be excluded; we mean all cases of conspiracy where the act conspired to be done is in itself not unlawful, and the crime is solely in the conspiracy, or the means of conducting it. Here, it is plain the Justices would not have jurisdiction to try the act conspired to be done, if it were done by a single individual; because then it would not be an offence at all; and as the Justices cannot try a conspiracy unless they could try the act conspired to be done, if done by a single individual, it seems that all conspiracies where the crime is merely in the conspiracy, or in the means of carrying it into effect, and not in the act, must be tried elsewhere than at sessions, although the means used might of themselves fall within the jurisdiction of the justices.

Again, with regard to the 13th clause of exclusion, cases will probably arise where the offence is an offence at common law, and also incidentally an offence against some provision of the laws relating to bankrupts and insolvents. Whether it is the intention of the act to take away the jurisdiction of magistrates in such cases, may become an arguable question.

Great, and we believe beneficial, changes will however be on the whole effected by this act; and it does not seem altogether unreasonable to imagine, that, if it has not been intended to do so, it will in fact pave the way to some plan for ingrafting on the jurisdiction of Justices of Quarter Sessions and Recorders, a jurisdiction in civil matters, in the nature of that local jurisdiction, which has been hitherto so frequently the subject of futile legislative schemes for local or county courts.

A LEARNED correspondent has favoured us with an elaborate argument in support of the claim of a judgment creditor who has taken possession under an elegit, without notice of prior equitable incumbrancers, to hold the land against such incumbrancers. We apprehend, that the point is too plain to be questioned. The novel part of Lord Cottenham's dictum in Whitworth v. Gaugain, (1 Cr. & Ph. 325; 5 Jur. 523), and that which has not met with the general acquiescence of the profession, is the doctrine, that a judgment creditor who has taken his judgment without notice of a prior equitable incumbrance on specific lands, may, after he has notice of the incumbrance, sue out execution and extend the lands, without any liability to equitable interference; the objection to his claim to do this being, that, according to some old authorities, a creditor cannot be regarded as having the security of specific lands in his contemplation when he takes a judgment, and therefore his equity to resort to those lands must be treated as inferior to the equity of an incumbrancer by direct charge; so that the case does not fall within the rule, that a Court of equity will not interfere to take away the legal estate in favour of one whose claim is founded on no better equity, but on priority merely. Upon this question we shall take an early opportunity of offering some further remarks. But where the creditor, before he receives notice of a prior claim, actually resorts to the security of the particular lands in dispute by suing out execution, there can be no pretence for treating his equity as being in any way inferior to or less specific than that obtained by the most direct and formal charge that can be made.

ATTENDANCE AT THE JUDGES'S CHAMBERS.—A Correspondent suggests, that, amidst the various improvements in the practice of the Courts, it is somewhat surprising to find that no effectual improvement has taken place to diminish the long-existing and universally complained-of inconvenience of attendance at the Chambers of the respective Judges. There can be no doubt that the Judges would willingly lend their aid to amend the present vexatious system of attending summonses, if some better mode were suggested to them. At the present time, and during a part of the long vacation, the attorneys and their clerks are uselessly kept waiting sometimes the whole day, and on other days for two or three hours together, before they can take their turn to go before the sitting Judge; and in many instances, the matter to be heard is of such a nature as to be disposed of by the Judge in a few seconds. Now, with a view to lessen the labour of the Judge, and to save much valuable time, our correspondent suggests that summonses for time to plead, for delivery of better particulars of plaintiff's demand, for admission of documents, and for taxation of costs, and such other matters as might be approved of by the Judges, should be heard and disposed of by one of the present Masters of each court, whose duty it should be to attend daily at the chambers of the respective Judges, in the same manner as the Masters in Chancery give their attendance at the public office. This arrangement would occupy the Masters but a short time, and would afford greater facility to the Judges to dispatch their other business. During the long vacation, the inconvenience is intolerable, for one Judge has to take on himself the burthen of the business of all the courts; and although he attends from ten o'clock in the forenoon till five o'clock in the afternoon, he is frequently unable to get through his summonses, many of which are necessarily adjourned till the following day. It is therefore to be hoped that some such improvement as is here suggested will soon be effected.

ON BONDS AND OTHER CONTRACTS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

It has been long laid down as a principle of law, that contracts in restraint of trade generally cannot be supported. In an early case, much cited in all the more modern ones, (Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 P. W. 181, and 10 Mod. 130), in which the court determined in favour of a bond, reciting, that A. had taken a shop of B., who was a baker, for a certain term, and had given B. so much money for it, and conditioned to be void if during the term B. should not exercise the trade of a baker within the parish where the shop was, the court discussed the law on this subject at length, and laid down, that general restraints in trade over all England are void, whether by bond, contract, or promise; and that, whether relating to a man's own trade to which he is brought up, or any other trade; and that no man can contract not to use trade at all. (See 1 P. W. 187). The doctrine was put in that case on the twofold ground of the mischief to the party restrained, by the loss of his livelihood and the subsistence of his family, and the mischief to the public by depriving it of an useful member*. Again, in The Gunmakers' Company v. Fell, (Willis, 388), the court said, referring to the case above cited—"The general rule is, that all restraints of trade, (which the law so much favours), if nothing more appears, are bad." And without going through the whole list of cases in which this doctrine has been recognised as law, it may be sufficient to refer to the recent case of Ward v. Byrne, (5 Moo. & W. 548), in which the court, holding that a bond entered into by the defendant, prevented him (if valid) generally from setting up in business on his own account as a coal merchant, or being employed by any other person in that business for a certain time limited in the bond, held as a consequence that the bond was void in law, as this would be a restriction unlimited in point of space. "The parties," said Lord Abinger, C.B., "stand thus—The defendant served the plaintiff in his capacity of a coal merchant, probably to keep his accounts; and if the plaintiff had limited the restraint to his accepting any office as clerk to a coal merchant within a given distance, so as not to prejudice the plaintiff, that might have been reasonable. But the construction which the court have put upon the contract is, that he (the defendant) is not to become a coal merchant, or serve one in any capacity whatever for the space of nine months. This restriction extends to all parts of England, and to every species of engagement by which this person during that time could gain a livelihood by his trade. What protection could the plaintiff require to an extent like this? Can it be supposed the plaintiff's trade could be prejudiced by this man's entering into the service of a coal merchant in Scotland? . . . The obligation which the defendant undertakes by his bond is, that he neither shall be nor serve a coal merchant in any capacity for nine months. That goes so far beyond what the plaintiff could require, that it is an unreasonable restriction. It is void on both grounds." And per Parke, B.—"The question is, whether the restraint is not void as being against the general policy of the law. The principle on which these cases stand is laid down in Mitchell v. Reynolds, that the public have an interest in every person

* The soundness of this reasoning may be much questioned; for if a man contracts for an adequate consideration not to pursue a trade, he does not deprive himself of his livelihood or his family of subsistence, any more than the owner of land does when he sells his land and obtains the price of it; nor can the public be said to lose the services of an useful member, for the effect of the transaction is in substance merely to take A. out of a particular mode of serving the public, and replace him by B.

carrying on his trade freely, and therefore a general restraint of trade is void on a principle of public policy, when entered into by bond or by simple contract." And further: "It seems to me that there is no authority in favour of the position that there can be a general restriction limited only as to time*. It might therefore now be considered, but for a very recent case which we will next notice, that any agreement by which a party affects to bind himself not to carry on trade, either with or without limit as to time, is void if it be not limited as to locality. But in Whittaker v. Howe, (3 Beav. 383), Lord Langdale, M. R., held an agreement by a solicitor for valuable consideration not to practise as solicitor in any part of Great Britain for twenty years without the consent of the plaintiff valid, and his Lordship accordingly restrained the defendant from practising as an attorney or solicitor in any part of Great Britain, in his own name or in the name of any other person, and from endeavouring to induce any persons clients of the plaintiff to cease or abstain from employing the plaintiff as their attorney or solicitor. It does not appear that Ward v. Byrne was cited to his Lordship; but the cases and dicta most relied upon in Ward v. Byrne were cited. There were several points made in the case, but on the principal one, of the validity of the agreement, Lord Langdale thus expressed himself: "The agreement is alleged to be void as being in restraint of the exercise of trade or profession. In the cases which have occurred, I have not observed any distinction taken between trade and professions. But the distinction between different sorts of trades or professions has been taken and appears to be material. In this case a valuable consideration being given, the question is, whether the restraint intended to be imposed on Mr. Howe is reasonable. The words of Chief Justice Tindal, in Horner v. Graves, (7 Bing. 743), may be safely adopted: 'We do not see how a better test can be applied to the question, whether this is or is not a reasonable restraint of trade, than by considering whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in favour of whom it is given, and not so large as to interfere with the interests of the public. Whatever restraint is larger than the necessary protection of the party (requires) can be of no benefit to either; it can only be oppressive, and if oppressive, it is in the eye of the law unreasonable. Whatever is injurious to the interests of the public is void on the grounds of public policy.'

"Now, whatever may be the talents, knowledge, and experience of Mr. Howe, and I am disposed to rate them highly, I cannot say that in my opinion, the public interest will be in any way interfered with or affected, by his not being allowed to practise as an attorney and solicitor in Great Britain for twenty years without the consent of Mr. Whittaker.

"The question therefore is, whether the restraint ought to be considered as reasonable in this particular case. The business is that of an attorney and solicitor, which, to a large extent, may be carried on by correspondence or by agents; and as to which it has already been decided, that a restraint of practice within a distance of

* It should be observed, that in this case a case was cited from the Year Book, (2 H. 5, pl. 26), as determining that a bond not to carry on the trade of a dyer for half-a-year was void. But on examining that case, it does not appear that the restriction was general. The condition was, that if the defendant should not use his trade of a dyer in the town where the plaintiff, &c., for half-a-year, the bond should be of no force. . . . The words in the Year Book are "sur condition q si le def ne usent my son art de dier's craft deins le ville ou le plaintiff, &c., per certain temps, &c." The case therefore determined, not that a general restriction of trade is void, but that is clearly at this day not law, viz. that a restriction against carrying on trade for a limited time in a particular place, is void.

150 miles was not an unreasonable restraint. It was decided in the case of the surgeon dentist, where the occupation required the personal presence of the practise and the patient at the same place, that a restraint of practice within a distance of 100 miles was an unreasonable restraint.

"Agreeing with the Court of Common Pleas, that in such cases 'no certain precise boundary can be laid down within which the restraint would be reasonable and beyond which excessive;' having regard to the nature of the profession, to the limitation of time, and to the decision that a distance of 150 miles does not describe an unreasonable boundary, I must say, as Lord Kenyon said in Davis v. Mason, 'I do not see that the limits are necessarily unreasonable, nor do I know how to draw the line.'

"At present, therefore, I cannot come to the conclusion that this agreement is void; and I do not think that this court can refuse to grant an injunction to restrain the violation of a contract or covenant, because there may be some part of the agreement which the court could not compel the defendant specifically to perform."

The Master of the Rolls appears therefore to have considered that the rule is, not merely that a general restriction on trade is void, but that every restriction on trade is void, subject to this, among other exceptions, that if it can be shewn that the particular restriction before the court is not de facto injurious to the public, and is not unreasonable, as regards the protection of the contracting party, having regard to the nature of the business to which the restriction applies, then the general rule does not apply, and the contract may be supported.

In this view of the case, Whittaker v. Howe, although at first sight it seems inconsistent with the cases in general, and in particular with Ward v. Byrne, will be found perhaps not to impugn the authority of that case; for although in Ward v. Byrne, the circumstances, so far as regards time and locality, were of exactly the same nature as in Whittaker v. Howe, yet, in Ward v. Byrne, it would seem, by what fell from the judges, that the determination was partly grounded on this—that the restriction, to the extent to which it was carried, was not necessary for the protection of the contracting party, and therefore there was nothing to displace the application of the maxim, that, as tending to the withdrawal of the restricted party from serving the public, and as tending to preclude him from using his trade as a means of subsistence, it was against public policy.

It cannot however be denied that the case of Whittaker v. Howe to some extent modifies, if it does not actually clash with the doctrine of preceding cases, and unless that case is overruled, the principle must now, as we apprehend, be considered this—that a restriction upon trade generally, without any limit as to locality, is bad, unless the nature of the business to which it refers is such, that the protection of the contracting party may require so extensive a restriction, and that the public interest may not be damaged by the withdrawal of the services of the individual restrained.

That there are many exceptions to the general rule in respect of special restrictions on trade, whether as to particular customers or particular localities, is also well settled on authority. We shall reserve the consideration of these special restrictions to a future number.

LONDON, JULY 16, 1842.

FROM a notice recently given by the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords, it seems that we are to look for some new proposition for the establishment of Local Courts. That there is something very attractive in the idea of Local Courts can hardly be denied, and, indeed, the pertinacity with which one statesman after another attacks this difficult subject, is sufficient evidence of the fact. That there is also something of exceeding difficulty in the construction of a really good system of Local Courts, would seem also manifest from the fact that every successive design has failed in engaging for itself the approbation of the public and of the profession. We apprehend, however, that the great difficulty standing in the way of the production of a good plan for Local Courts, lies not so much in the intrinsic difficulty of the subject, as in the inaccurate notions and unreasonable expectations of the public. The prevailing idea of what Local Courts should be appears to be this—that they are to be adapted to the adjudication of disputes touching small amounts of property, with perfect justice, both real and visible, and at the same time with perfect cheapness. To effect this, there must be, in the view of the main body of the public, an exclusion of all forms and technicalities, which they the public conceive to be merely things invented for the entanglement of suitors and the profit of lawyers; and above all, there must be an exclusion of lawyers. The notion is, that when each party states his own case, without any pleadings beyond perhaps a mere general allegation of the nature of the injury complained of, and the Judge is unincumbered by the shackles of technical forms, and unmythified by the rhetorical artifices of advocates, a rational and enlightened judgment will be quickly and certainly arrived at, which shall be so obviously founded in truth and equity, as to satisfy even the losing party, and bring in reality justice home to every man's door.

As however lawyers and legislators are perfectly aware that Courts of such a nature would be, if constructed, utter and absurd monstrosities, and would, instead of decorously working out justice, become scenes of unbearable altercation, in which no human being would be able patiently to investigate the truth, and calmly to apply any settled rule to decide upon the rights of the parties,—the struggle of the framers of Local Courts Bills seems ever to have been, to make something, which, by aid of the exclusion of the bar, the compulsory use of very short forms of pleading, and the annexation of a very economical scale of fees for the practising attornies, should present the appearance of a poor man's court divested of technicalities and sources of expense; and on the other hand, by the introduction of some forms and some professional persons, to retain, if possible, something of regularity in proceedings, and something in the nature of legal assistance, to prevent the Judge being utterly stunned and overwhelmed by such passionate and discursive ramblings, as would be expected to proceed from uneducated litigant parties advocating their own causes untied by any precise pleadings. If this be, and we sincerely believe it is, the theory of the formations which have hitherto taken place of those intellectual deposits called Local Courts Bills, it is not marvellous that, instead of becoming consolidated, they should have been blown away and dispersed in space by the hostile breaths of contending parties. In truth, all the plans which have been hitherto put forth for Local Courts Bills, appear to us to have been framed ad captandum; and to have endeavoured to reconcile things in themselves incompatible; and hence it is, we apprehend, that they have all been rejected as impracticable. There can be no question that the mode of proceeding in the Superior Courts of Law, simplified though they have been of late, constitutes a machinery too complex to be put and kept in motion without an expense to the litigant parties, incompatible with the practical administration of justice in civil matters, as between litigants of the humbler classes of society. And if we turn attention from the administration of the common law to the adjudication in equity upon those classes of cases which fall within its jurisdiction, the same remark is applicable with infinitely greater force. Judicial investigation in matters of merely equitable claims, seems indeed wholly unattainable to persons whose claims have reference to property even of moderate amount.

It does seem, therefore, that some different mode of administering justice is requisite in matters of small amount; and it may be conceded, that, notwithstanding some of the defects which local tribunals would have, arising out of the possibility of local influences acting on the Judge, the juries, or the witnesses, still, on the whole, local tribunals for disposing of litigation in matters of property and civil rights of trifling amount would be the most convenient. But in the constitution of such tribunals, we venture to submit, that nothing satisfactory will ever be done until the idea of securing cheapness to the litigating parties, by the exclusion of forms and of advocates of competent learning, is entirely given up as unfounded in reason. It is obvious that the Judges at least, to be capable of satisfying the demand for justice, must be men of learning and of some reputation in the profession; and it is equally obvious, that, even if such men would consent to accept the office of presiding over Courts, in which they are not to have the benefit either of forms to secure regularity, or of advocates of competent learning to assist them in arriving at the truth, they would soon become themselves deteriorated by the absence of those inducements to judicial superiority.

In a Court so constructed, the only preserving power, the learning and influence of the Judge, would, we apprehend, very soon lose its force, and leave the Court undistinguished by any other quality than its cheapness. The object, as it appears to us, to be kept in view, is to have so much of strictness of pleading as will confine parties to the real matter on which they require adjudication; so much of form in the proceedings as will secure decorum and regularity; and such an attendance of advocates as will give respectability to the Court, and assistance to the Judge. A Court in which these requisites do not exist, may be a poor man's Court, but it will neither be nor be believed to be a Court of Justice. That such requisites can be attained with merely trifling expense seems quite impossible, if the principle is to prevail in regard to Local Courts as well as to the Superior Courts, that the litigants themselves are to bear all the costs of their litigation. But if there does really exist a denial of justice to the poor man by reason of the expensive nature of legal proceedings; and if, as we in common with many much abler writers than ourselves contend, adequate regularity in the proceedings of the Court, and ability in the professional men concerned, cannot be obtained without some considerable expense, why should not the State take upon itself a portion of the expenditure necessary for distributing to those who cannot otherwise obtain it, justice of such quality as to be worth having?

It has been again and again proposed to exclude parties litigating in Local Courts from employing counsel under the idea of cutting off expense; and it has been proposed on the same principle to permit the attorneys acting as advocates, to receive only such fees as would manifestly afford them a remuneration perfectly ridiculous. To such plans it has been objected, and hitherto successfully, that such a course would throw the whole business of Local Courts into the hands of the most uninformed, and perhaps the most unprincipled of the profession. It has then sometimes been proposed to exclude all technical pleadings and all lawyers; and to this it has been objected with equal success, that such a course would necessarily bring before the Court, and occupy the public time by a great quantity of business which never ought to have come there, and would waste in the disposal of the business properly brought into Court, an enormous quantity of time by reason of the uncontrollable loquacity and discursiveness of parties pleading their own causes*. We confess we see no escape from the difficulty of choosing between rendering justice cheap and bad, or dear and therefore inaccessible, unless by carrying farther the principle of pauper causes, and adopting the principle that the poor litigant is entitled at the hands of the State, to an advocate as well as to a judge. Our notion of the general principle on which Local Courts must be constructed, if they are to be substantially Courts of Justice for poor men, would be this—that, in regard to the pleadings, the rule applied to contracts should prevail, viz. that no particular form of words should be requisite; but that, in the complaint and defence, the points to be tried should be stated in any language that the pleader might think fit, with the utmost brevity consistent with clearness. That the Judge should be bound by the rules of law and equity, and not have any arbitrary power of deciding, as it has been frequently proposed, according to his notions of equity and “good conscience;” that, in addition to the usual judicial staff of an ordinary Court, there should be a certain number of attorneys and a certain number of counsel appointed by the State, and partly paid by the State, whose duty should be to give all the necessary professional assistance in their respective departments, in the entire conduct of a cause, to such litigants as desired their services, taking from them, in addition to their salaries paid by the state, certain fixed fees of moderate amount; but that, at the same time, it should be permitted to the parties on either side, if they thought fit, to retain at their own costs any other counsel or attorneys than those appointed as public officers of the Court.

MASTER IN CHANCERY.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Thomas Aloysius Smith, of Manchester, Gent., to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

* We have on more than one occasion been present in the Court of Chancery when parties, and those not in the class of uneducated persons, have addressed the Court in support of their own applications. And we have seen even there, all the authority of the Court unable to control the irrelevant wanderings of such advocates.

FORM OF TRUSTS FOR SEPARATE USE.

"The form commonly used for restraining married women from disposing of their separate property by anticipation is insufficient for that purpose. The receipt clause ought to declare that the receipts of the married woman, to be given from time to time after the income of the property shall have become due, shall be, and that no other receipts shall be, sufficient discharges to the trustees." The above words are cited from the marginal note of the report of Brown v. Bamford, by Mr. Simons, (vol. 11, p. 127; see S. C., ante, p. 481), and the case certainly bears out this extraordinary statement of the law. We used to think that a limitation "in trust for the separate and inalienable use of A. B." would be sufficient to protect A. B. from her husband's interference and her own improvidence; and as many of our readers were probably of the same opinion, it is proper that their attention should be called to the doctrine of the Vice-Chancellor of England, which, as his Honor himself observes, is so much at variance with ordinary notions.

In Brown v. Bamford, leaseholds for years and stock in the funds were bequeathed to trustees, "upon trust, from time to time, during the natural life of Sophia Bamford, or until she should be duly declared a bankrupt, or take the benefit of any act passed or to be passed for the relief of insolvent debtors, to pay the clear rents, interest, dividends, and proceeds of such leaseholds, stocks, funds, and securities unto such person or persons, for such intents and purposes, and in such manner as Sophia Bamford, by any writing or writings under her hand, when and as the same should become due, but not by way of assignment, charge, or other anticipation thereof, should notwithstanding her then present or any future coverture direct or appoint, and in default of any such direction or appointment, or so far as the same if incomplete should not extend, into her proper hands, for her sole and separate use, independent of the debts, control, or interference of her then present or any future husband; for which purpose the testator directed that the receipts in writing, under the hand of Sophia Bamford, should, notwithstanding any such coverture as aforsaid, be good and sufficient discharges for the last-mentioned rents, interest, dividends, and proceeds, or so much thereof as should in such receipts respectively be expressed to have been received; and from and after the decease, bankruptcy, or insolvency of the said Sophia Bamford," then over. If, according to the doctrine of the old school of conveyancing, safety consisteth in length, this form should have been impugnable; but it proved to be no match for the Vice-Chancellor's astuteness. After the testator's death, Sophia Bamford, being then under coverture, executed a guarantee to the Sunderland Joint-Stock Banking Company, for the debt of her son-in-law, expressly charging all the property to which she was entitled under the above-mentioned will; and upon a demurrer to a bill filed to obtain the benefit of this charge, Sir L. Shadwell held that the charge bound the whole of her interest. After stating that he founded his decision on the same grounds as that in Barrymore v. Ellis, (8 Sim. 1), his Honor proceeded:—

"I admit the common form to be in the terms stated; but it has always appeared to me defective. When I was in the habit of drawing conveyances, and wished to settle on a lady property over which she was to have no power of anticipation, I always used to introduce an express proviso, that no receipt should be a discharge to the trustees, except a receipt given by the lady for the rent or dividends, according to the nature of the trust property, then actually due. The proviso to which I have alluded declared, as far as my recollection serves me, that the receipts of the lady, under her own hand, to be given from time to time, after the rents or dividends should have actually accrued due, should be, and that no other receipts should be, sufficient discharges to the trustees for the amount of the monies therein expressed to be received. In this case, however, there are no negative words in the receipt clause, and therefore there is nothing to restrict the power which Mrs. Bamford had to dispose of or charge the rents and dividends of the trust property, under the general direction to pay those rents and dividends to her for her separate use."

The limitation in Barrymore v. Ellis was very similar to that in Brown v. Bamford. It was contained in a deed of settlement of an annuity, and ran thus: "in trust during the joint lives of J. M. Williams and Lady Barrymore, to pay the annuity, as the same should become due and payable, to such person or persons, and for such intents and purposes, as Lady Barrymore should by any writing signed with her name in her own handwriting, notwithstanding her said coverture, direct or appoint, but so as not to deprive herself of the benefit thereof by sale or other anticipation; and for want of such direction or appointment, to pay the same to Lady Barrymore for her own sole separate and peculiar use and benefit, it being thereby agreed and declared that the said annuity should not be subject to the debts, control, interference, or engagements of J. M. Williams, and that the receipt or receipts of Lady Barrymore, or of any person or persons so to be by her appointed to receive the same as thereinbefore was mentioned, should, notwithstanding her marriage with J. M. Williams, be a sufficient discharge or sufficient discharges to the person or persons paying the same, or any part thereof." Sir L. Shadwell, V. C.—"The deed appears to me to admit of this construction, namely, that in the first instance it is a grant to such person or persons as Lady Barrymore should, in a given manner, appoint, and subject thereto to her sole use generally; and if that be so, then it was competent to her to dispose of the annuity, without executing the power in the manner before referred to. The deed does not say, 'do and shall pay the same into her own hands, &c.,' but simply 'to her for her own sole use.' Then, is this different from a limitation to such uses as A. shall in a certain manner appoint, and subject thereto to A. generally? In my opinion, this is within the spirit of Cox v. Chamberlain, (4 Ves. 631), which has been supported at law by Roach v. Wadham, (6 East, 289), and Wilde v. Fort, (4 Taunt. 334). For Lady Barrymore had both a limited power of appointment and the general uncontrolled dominion over the property; and therefore if we find her conveying the property, the grantee will take, notwithstanding the restrictions imposed on the power of disposition."

Cox v. Chamberlain decided, that where a party has a power of appointing the use, and an estate in default of the power, he may convey under his ownership, without exercising the power or observing the formalities made necessary to such execution; and this doctrine was recognised in Roach v. Wadham; and in Wilde v. Fort, (where the point did not arise), Cox v. Chamberlain is mentioned as an authority. But to decide that a power to appoint a legal estate by way of use does not, by implication, do what by no express words or devise can possibly be done, take away the incidents of a common-law estate, limited in default of appointment, is a very different thing from deciding, that, in limitations entirely equitable, in construing which the intention and substance and not the form are regarded,—an intention distinctly and unequivocally expressed, and consistent with equitable doctrines, is to be defeated by an implication for which, in fact, there can be no place, unless the intention expressed in the previous part of the limitation never existed. This is a revival of the doctrine of Newton v. Reid and Massey v. Parker in a still more unreasonable and extravagant form. In those cases it was said, that, as an unmarried woman had an unrestricted power of disposing of property limited in trust for her, notwithstanding a declaration against alienation, and as marriage is generally a gift in law by the woman of her personal estate to the husband; therefore, on marriage without a settlement, such property passes to the husband free from the restraint. But that doctrine is overruled; and we confidently anticipate that the decisions in the cases upon which we are commenting will share its fate.

The decision in Lady Barrymore's case is, perhaps, the most extraordinary of the two, because, in that case, the direction as to receipts extended only to receipts signed by Lady Barrymore herself, or by any person or persons so to be appointed by her, i. e. appointed under the preceding power of appointment without anticipation. Surely if the maxims "Expressum facit cessare tacitum" and "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius" are ever capable of application, this was a case for applying them.

Such being the state of the authorities, the following form of a trust for separate and inalienable use, which is believed to be effectual, may be acceptable to our readers:—

"In trust to pay the income arising from the said trust property to such person or persons as the said A. B. shall, from time to time, by writing, under her hand, (but not by way of anticipation), appoint to receive the same, and subject to or in default of any such appointment to pay the same income to the said A. B. during her life, for her sole and separate use, without anticipation, and free from the control, debts, or engagements of any husband of the said A. B. And it is hereby declared, that a receipt signed by the said A. B., or by such appointee or appointees as aforesaid, shall alone be a good discharge for the money thereby acknowledged to have been received; but no appointment, assignment, charge, disposition, or receipt, shall be an authority for the payment of or a discharge for any part of such income that shall first become payable after the expiration of one calendar month from the day when the said A. B. shall actually make, sign, or authorise such appointment, assignment, charge, disposition, or receipt."

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, July 11.

The Lord Chancellor laid on the table a Bill for the Abolition of certain Offices in the Court of Chancery in England. The Bill applied to the Six Clerks and the Sworn Clerks. It was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, July 14.

Sir R. Peel moved for a Bill to continue the operation of the Act for the Trial of Controverted Elections. The Act now in force had passed in June, 1841, and its duration was limited to the two sessions which should elapse after the then-ensuing General Election. The Election Petitions had been all postponed to the present session, so that in fact the law had only been tried during one session. He proposed to bring in a Bill for continuing it, but not for a longer period than that originally contemplated.

Mr. Sheil said he had been a member of the Sudbury Committee, and had learned how important it was to have some legal person perfectly impartial and of competent professional acquirements, to direct the Committee respecting questions on which they were desirous of arriving at sound conclusions. Leave was given to bring in the Bill.

The Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Bill was read a third time and passed.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE PRACTICE OF LIFE ASSURANCE.

To Attorneys and Solicitors.

55, Chancery-lane, 9th April, 1842.

FOR the convenience of persons in the Western and Central Districts of London, and particularly of Gentlemen connected with the Law, THE LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND DUBLIN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY have opened a Branch Office at 55, Chancery-lane, where Prospectuses, Forms of Proposals, and every other information connected with the business of the Company, may be procured; and where Examinations of Parties whose Lives are proposed for Assurance may be taken, and Policies effected, as at the Chief Office of the Company, in Charlotte-row, Mansion-house.

Your attention is solicited to some of the distinguishing features of this Company, which have been introduced after mature deliberation, and which will be most conveniently pointed out by referring to Policies, as Money Transaction and Family Provision Policies.

MONEY TRANSACTION POLICIES.—Your professional experience and acquaintance with the records of the Courts of Law and Equity, must have convinced you that considerable changes were required in the practice and rules of Life Offices, to render this class of Policies valid and unimpeachable documents of security, which no unforeseen circumstances or future accidents could invalidate. This Company has endeavoured, and they think successfully, to render their Policies as indefeasible and negotiable securities as is possible, consistently with a due regard to the safety of the contracting parties; and to effect this object the Company has introduced the following clause into their Deed of Settlement:—

CLAUSE 78.—“That every Policy issued by the Company shall be indefeasible and indisputable, and the fact of the issuing of the same shall be conclusive evidence of its validity; and it shall not be lawful for the Company to delay payment of the money assured thereby, on the ground of any error, mistake or omission, however important, made by or on the part of the person or persons effecting the same; and that, on the contrary, the amount receivable under the same shall be paid at the time stipulated by the Policy, to the person entitled thereto, as if no such error, mistake or omission had been made or discovered, unless the Policy shall have been obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation.”

FAMILY PROVISION POLICIES.—In the well-founded belief that Life Assurance business is profitable, persons making provisions for their families, and contemplating a long duration of time between the date of the Policy and the claim to arise under it, generally prefer Assurances which may carry with them a right to participate in the profits to be realized by the Company during the currency of their Policies. By the Deed of Constitution of this Company, the participating Assured are entitled to the WHOLE OF THE MUTUAL PROFITS, as if they had been Assured in a purely Mutual Society; and they have, at the same time, the security not only of the Funds of the Company, arising from the accumulated premiums, but also the proprietary funds and subscribed Capital of the Company. To the Shareholders are allotted only those profits which are realized by the investment of their own paid capital, and from the excess of the premiums derived from the Non-participating Assurances. This mode of Division of Profits is peculiar to this Company.

In order to provide against the defeat of a Policy in the hands of a CREDITOR, by the DEBTOR, whose Life is Assured leaving the country, and going beyond the prescribed limits, the Company grant WHOLE WORLD POLICIES, whereby, on condition of receiving an extra premium, varying in amount according to the circumstances of the case, but fixed and determined at the time of issuing the Policy, the debtor, on whose Life an Assurance has been effected, is entitled to go to or reside in any part of the world, without invalidating the Assurance.

To enable a party to effect an Assurance at the LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, and to entitle him to discontinue it at a less sacrifice than by any other plan, a seven years' Half-premium system has been introduced; and, upon comparing the following scale with any other which has been devised for reducing present payments, it will be seen how much more economically a loan transaction can be fortified by this kind of Policy than by any other. The Half-premium system possesses a further advantage over temporary Assurances, or those for a Term of Years, from the Assured having the option of continuing for Life the Policy which he may have procured for a mere temporary purpose.

THE COMMISSION allowed to Attornies is 10l. per cent. upon the first, and 5l. per cent. upon all future premiums; and the Commission continues to be payable to the Attorney, who completed the Assurance with the Company, although the future premiums may be paid by others.

LONDON, JULY 23, 1842.

WHEN the work of alteration is once begun, it is very difficult to know where to stop. Of this, in matters of a private nature, instances may be daily seen amongst those who delight in building their own habitations; and in public matters we have abundant illustrations of it in the House of Commons, and some in the House of Lords. It is to one of the latter that we are now about to allude. Some time ago the noble and learned Lord who presides in the Court of Queen's Bench proposed some alterations in the Law of Evidence, which we may venture to say met with the almost unanimous approval of those who were qualified to form an opinion upon the subject. Our readers need hardly be reminded that these alterations consisted in allowing certain persons to give evidence, who are now, on account of interest in the result, infamy, or other causes, rejected; or, in more comprehensive terms, making such matters a cause of objection to the credibility of the witness, and not to his competency to be examined. To these propositions was however appended another, having for its object, if we remember rightly, the exempting a certain class of Baptists from taking oaths in courts of justice. This was for a time abandoned by the learned Lord, on its being suggested that it would be better to make it the subject of a separate measure. The matter has not, however, been allowed to drop, and a discussion has taken place in the House of Lords, from which it would appear that other noble lords are in favour of such a proposition. With all due deference to their authority, we must record our humble opinion against it. We wonder it did not suggest itself to those who support these views, that they were not at all consistent with the other proposed alterations. The law says there are certain persons, who, from their peculiar circumstances, may possibly, notwithstanding the solemnity of an oath, be tempted to give false evidence, and therefore they shall not be examined; the Legislature says, Not so—some of them may speak the truth—let them be examined, and let the jury decide what credit is due to them. What is the conclusion from this, but that, if such persons are to be witnesses, it is more than ever necessary to impose upon them every possible obligation to speak the truth? Who are so likely to object to be sworn, as those who are unwilling, from motives of interest, to tell the truth? and how many consciences will there not be, faithful enough to their possessors, to conjure up a scruple when occasion requires!

We are fully aware of the plausible argument that may be adduced in favour of dispensing with an oath. To compel a person to do that which he sincerely believes to be contrary to the law of God, appears to be a violent proceeding, and opposed to the acknowledged principle of religious toleration; and the reason for it, derived from public policy and the interests of the community, are not easily understood by common minds. When we see a man willing to undergo imprisonment, or contribute an extraordinary supply to the Queen's revenue, rather than act inconsistently with his opinions, we are undoubtedly apt to regard him as a martyr, and believe he would as readily speak the truth without taking an oath as with; but it must be remembered, that it is one thing to refuse now, when the law will punish the refusal, and another when it is permitted. Many who would not refuse now, will find no difficulty when no risk is to be run. It is only necessary, we think, to consider what is the purpose of a judicial system, to arrive at the conclusion, that such a dispensation from taking an oath could not be safely granted. Courts of Justice are established for the purpose of redressing injuries committed by one member of a society upon another, for both civil and criminal law aim at that end, the difference being only in the latter regarding the wrong done to the individual, as an injury also to the social body. It is necessary, therefore, that the tribunal which is to administer redress should be accurately informed of the facts relating to the injury; and the very best means to obtain that information ought to be adopted. It will be said then, if your great object is to find out the truth, and the depositary of the facts will reveal them as truthfully without an oath as with, why is it required? This assumes that the bare affirmation will have the same effect as the oath; and we do not deny, that, with some persons, it may be so. We will admit then, for the sake of argument, that the truth would be as surely got at by allowing individuals who believed their bare word to be as binding as any form of swearing, to give evidence in that manner. What answer is to be given then to the argument? We apprehend this:—The aim of a judicial system is, not simply to redress injuries, but to prevent them also; and its proceedings should be conducted in such a manner as to inspire the members of society with confidence that they will be able to find protection. Unless individuals can rely upon the law as a guardian from injury, the well-being of society is at an end. That reliance must be founded upon an opinion that the laws are themselves just, and are administered by able and impartial judges; and there must also be a conviction that the judge will be rightly informed of the controversy. No man will enter a court of justice unless he believes that the facts within his own knowledge will also be placed within the knowledge of the judge; and, therefore, it is not sufficient that the truth should be told in courts of justice; it must be told in such a manner as to obtain the confidence of society. The question then is reduced to a very small compass. Does, or does not, the great majority of the people of this country believe that there is any effect in an oath? There can be no doubt that it does, although there may be some individuals who from the purest motives object to swear. Are we, then, to gratify the scruples of a few, by doing violence to the feelings of the many, destroying their confidence in the law, and rudely violating the security they now enjoy? Not at all; and the exceptions which have been allowed strengthen our argument. In the cases of the Quakers and Moravians, the opinion regarding oaths is well known. It forms one of a class; and the individual proclaims by his conduct in other respects his adoption of it. But if individuals belonging to no particular sect are to be allowed to object to an oath, by what means is the conscientiousness of the objection to be ascertained? Perhaps he may never before have had occasion to mention the subject; or, if so, to a few only. In fact, no distinction could be made. Oaths must, we apprehend, be preserved as at present, or altogether abolished. That the present system is much abused, that oaths are now administered in so careless and irreverent a manner as to be a disgrace to a Christian country, are reasons only for its reformation, not abolition. Our limits forbid us from proceeding further. The giving way in the present case would probably soon be followed by an objection to being a witness at all, as thereby becoming a party to litigation. And wherefore should not that objection be as conscientious as the other? Once allow that the doing violence to a man's conscience is of sufficient weight to overbalance all other things, and we shall not know where to stop. Our readers will easily suggest to their own minds other instances where this principle would be applicable; and dangerous indeed would it be to admit it. Let us not do it then; nor in a case where benefit is, to say the least, problematical, rashly interfere with the present system.

Reviews.

A Guide to the Laws of England affecting Roman Catholics. By THOMAS CHISHOLME ANSTEE, Esq., Barrister at Law. London. 1842. [Stevens & Norton.]

This is a book of a somewhat singular structure, of which a general idea may perhaps be conveyed, by supposing it to be the answer of a modern equity draftsman to the question, whether or no Roman Catholics in England have any and what rights;—the answer of our author being couched in this form—that the Roman Catholics labour under such and such disabilities, stating them, and save as aforesaid, he admits that they have the same rights as other people. We wish not to be understood as intimating that Mr. Anstee dwells upon the disabilities of Roman Catholics, for the purpose of exaggerating them, and holding them up as grievances; on the contrary, he very properly and carefully confines himself to collecting the law on the subject, and indulges in the very least possible quantity of observation not strictly in the nature of legal commentary; and we consider his work as a valuable addition to those, whose great merit is bringing the laws affecting particular classes of persons into such order and condensation as to render reference easy. We believe there is no other work which collects all the scattered enactments and decisions bearing on the civil and political rights and disabilities of Roman Catholics, so as to facilitate the labours of the lawyer who may have in the course of practice to consider the effect of the laws on those rights.

Mr. Anstee commences by shewing the statutory enactments on the effects and formalities attendant on the taking of the Catholic oath. He next discusses those general disabilities which still, notwithstanding the various relief acts, affect the condition of conforming Catholics, or those who consent to take the oath; and the perusal of this chapter will shew that such disabilities, contrary to the generally received notions of the unlearned, are by no means few. Whether it is proper or improper that, such as they are, they should exist, is a question on which, in imitation of Mr. Anstee, we shall offer no opinion; but the fact is clear that they do exist to a very considerable extent.

The next subject discussed by Mr. Anstee is the particular disabilities of Roman Catholics, not being qualified at law, that is, the disabilities which still affect Catholics, who either do not take the oath appointed to persons of their persuasion, or who omit certain formalities. For it must not be forgotten that, as it is expressed by Mr. Anstee, (p. 29), "Among the provisions of the relief acts, mitigating the ancient rigour of the penal code, there are very few which are not made to depend on the fulfilment of certain conditions." The relief acts do not abolish the law, and by mere force of the statute avoid the disabilities of Roman Catholics, but simply enable those Roman Catholics who will submit themselves to a specific test, to take themselves out of the operation of the law.

No doubt there are portions of the law, with regard to which the courts would be at this day astute to find reasons for avoiding to carry them into effect. For instance, let us take the case of the statutes making certain acts, such as extolling the papal authority, high treason. After stating some of these, Mr. Anstey observes, "The decisions under these acts have very greatly extended their application. It has been holden 'that the mere act of commending a book in defence of the papal supremacy, or allowing it to be good after having read it, or even after having heard a report of its being written in a foreign country, is an extolling or setting forth of the papal authority within the meaning of the statute. It has even been holden, (although two of the judges dissented from that construction), that a judge may ask a prisoner after conviction of and condemnation for a first offence, whether he be still of the same opinion; and that if he answer in the affirmative, he is guilty of high treason, as having advisedly maintained the Pope's power a second time.'" We apprehend, that, at the present day, few judges would have (to use the expression of the Lord Chancellor in a late debate on a very different subject) stomachs to digest such a rule of law.

Mr. Anstey treats at considerable length of the judicial notice taken under the existing state of the law, of Roman Catholic usages, and particularly discusses the question whether the courts would compel a Roman Catholic clergyman to give evidence on matter confided to him under the seal of confession. There can be no question that the Popish religion is now a lawful religion, and consequently that judicial notice will be taken of it and of its usages, speaking generally; but, notwithstanding the distinction which Mr. Anstey draws between the obligation imposed by the discipline of the Protestant Church on a clergyman of the Established Church, to silence as to the matters revealed to him in auricular confession, (pp. 78 and 79), and the obligation imposed by the Church of Rome on its priesthood, we confess that we do not think he succeeds in establishing the point that he seeks to establish, viz. that on legal principle, if not on authority, courts of justice will not compel a Roman Catholic priest to divulge matters communicated in confession. There is no argument of public policy, or of justice to the conscience of the witness, applying to the case of a Roman Catholic clergyman, which does not equally apply to that of a Protestant clergyman. In either case, the witness receives the information confidentially in his character of priest, and would never have received it but for that character. It is no argument to say, that in the case of the Catholic priest (even assuming it to be the fact, which may be thought very doubtful), the obligation is more binding on the conscience of the witness, than in the case of the Protestant clergyman. The ground of compelling the evidence to be given in the case of the clergyman of the Established Church is, that the law will not suffer any bodies, ecclesiastical or otherwise, to override the law of the land by a private rule of conduct framed for the government of individual consciences; and if this ground is acted upon, as it undoubtedly is in regard to witnesses, members of a church whose doctrines form of themselves part of the law, a fortiori, must it be, we would contend, on legal principle, acted upon in reference to witnesses, members of a church not even absolutely lawful, but only lawful upon certain statutory conditions. We conceive, therefore, that with reference to the two rules stated by Mr. Anstey, as seeming to flow from the cases and the principles of the law, viz. that, first, "auricular confessions, made to a Roman-Catholic priest, are at least privileged to this extent, that the court will in no case whatever compel the confessor to disclose them; and, secondly, that, perhaps upon a sound conception of the peculiar policy of the institution, and of what is due to public decency and morality, the court will even forbid the question to be put to the confessor, against the consent of his penitent." The first rule must be considered as at least doubtful, and the second as not at all to be relied on.

There is another point also on which we disagree with the learned author. In page 92 he says, in commenting on the existing law under the late acts as to the solemnization of marriages, (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85; 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 22), that the statutory enactment which makes it felony to solemnize any marriage under the acts in England, (except between Jews and Quakers), otherwise than in an Anglican chapel, unless by special licence, or than in a registered building, or a Registrar's office under the act, "is likely to have a serious operation among Roman Catholic clergymen attending the sick. It is not unfrequently that they feel themselves called upon to urge penitents, in certain cases, to make reparation on their death-beds by marriage. Such marriages, of course, have been never considered valid, except in foro conscientie, and as binding the parties, when convalescent, to complete them by a recourse to the formalities required at law. But, by this section, all illegal celebrations of marriages being made felonies, without any reservation in favour of such peculiar cases, it may often happen that the Roman Catholic ecclesiastic will find himself seriously compromised between his conscientious sense of duty and his inclination to obey the temporal law."

Now, we apprehend, that, when the act makes it felony to solemnize a marriage, it means a marriage, which, being solemnized and consummated, would be binding, although solemnized in contravention of the particular prescribed formalities; and that a marriage, purely affecting the conscience, and that only in reference to the particular religious creed of the parties, is not such a marriage as the act contemplates for the purpose of annexing penalties to the irregular solemnization of it.

These, however, are debatable points, on which, probably, no two lawyers would agree, and the views offered upon them by Mr. Anstey, even if erroneous, detract in no sensible degree from the value of his labours in setting forth the undoubted effects of the law on other points.

We have not left ourselves room to make any comments on the subsequent portions of the work, which treat of the consequences of the relief acts as they affect the position of Roman Catholics, in respect to various civil and political rights, and particularly as they affect their charitable institutions. On all these points Mr. Anstey has, with great industry and good practical arrangement, collected the enactments and authorities, and has succeeded in producing a work of considerable practical interest and utility.

Imperial Parliament.

Monday, July 18.

The Lord Chancellor, in moving the second reading of the Bankruptcy Bill, called the attention of the House at the same time to the other Bills which he had laid on the table for the Improvement of the Law of Lunacy and of County Courts. His Lordship said, with regard to the Bankruptcy Bill, he had adopted many of the parts of the Bill proposed by his noble and learned friend Lord Cottenham. With regard to those, founded as they were on the Report of the Commissioners appointed by Lord Cottenham, it would be better to leave them for the consideration of the committee. But he wished particularly to call their Lordships' attention to the proposed mode of administering the Bankrupt Laws. That portion of the system established by his noble and learned friend Lord Brougham, which consisted of the commissioners and official assignees, had given great and general satisfaction to the trading community. But it extended only to a circle of forty miles round London. He proposed to extend it, not by drawing a circle, but by applying it in certain counties, which would in effect extend it to a circle of 100 miles round London. He proposed to establish at five central points in five great towns beyond the London district, commissioners vested with the same power which was now vested in the London commissioners. They would have the same quantity of duty as now performed by the London commissioners, having a similar range and a similar jurisdiction. Next, with respect to the Lunacy measure. He proposed to carry this out by commissioners, the metropolitan district to extend twenty miles beyond London. The alteration which he proposed was the appointment of two commissioners for carrying the law into effect, both for the metropolitan district and throughout the country. He thought that two would be sufficient. He proposed also to do away with the payment of the commissioners by fees, a practice calculated to prolong the inquiries. He proposed, that the two commissioners should not only preside at the inquisition, but that many of the inquiries now taken before the Master should be conducted under the superintendence of the commissioners by viva voce evidence. He proposed also, that visitors, of whose number the commissioners should constitute a part, should have a continued superintendence over and examination into the condition of lunatics, so as to secure a continuance of their comfort, as well as the preservation of their property. Lastly, his Lordship came to the consideration of Local Courts. To Courts of this nature he had always had great objection, but as there appeared to be a great desire for them, it was better they should be all shaped on one uniform system, than that they should be in various and anomalous shapes, as at present. He objected to local Judges, both because of their liability to local prejudices and interests, and because they would fall from their isolation to preserve a uniform state of the law. He proposed to alter the judicial system of the country as little as possible. County Courts were a part of our ancient system of judicature; they were presided over by the county clerk, whose jurisdiction extended to 40s. If he extended it to 5*l*., he should innovate as little as possible on this ancient jurisdiction. He proposed, that the persons appointed to be judges should not be resident in the locality of their jurisdiction, but that about eight harristers of a certain standing should be appointed to make six or eight circuits a year. This he thought would be sufficient to dispatch the business. He would not enter into the details of the bill, which must necessarily be in a great measure like the details of every other Local Courts Bill, but content himself with stating the difference in principle between his Bill and those of his predecessors. He had thought it better to unite the three measures mentioned in one discussion, in order that their Lordships might dispose of them at once. He moved, that the Bankruptcy Bill be read a second time.

Lord Cottenham said, that as regarded the Bankruptcy Bill, it had been admitted by the Lord Chancellor, that his Bill had been copied in great part from his, (Lord Cottenham's). With regard to the County Courts Bill, he did not differ from the Lord Chancellor as to the extent of jurisdiction to be conferred on those Courts, or as to the modes in which the Courts were to transact the business. He objected, however, to his Bankruptcy Bill, because he left untouched the question of Insolvency, which his, Lord Cottenham's, had included. He objected also to the plan of Itinerant Commissioners in Lunacy, which he thought wholly impracticable. And as regarded the County Courts Bill, he thought the measure would be more complete by appointing a permanent resident Judge in the towns of principal importance, to be assisted in the performance of their duties by the regular Circuit Judges for each district as proposed by the Bill.

Lord Brougham said the chief difference between the Lord Chancellor's plan and that which he had in 1833 proposed, was that between a resident Judge and an ambulatory one. His Lordship argued that there was not any danger in having a permanent resident Judge in the present state of society and of the Bar; and alluded to the case of Scotland, where from time out of mind there had been in each county a permanent Local Judge, the sheriff depute, without any mischief or imputation of partiality.

Lord Wynford agreed fully with the Lord Chancellor, and thought his plan would be a great benefit to the country.

After a few words from Lord Campbell, who disapproved the measure, the Lord Chancellor replied, and the Bankruptcy Law Amendment Bill, the County Courts Bill, and the Lunacy Bill, went through a second reading, and were ordered to be committed on Friday.

SECT. 1 recites the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, s. 1, and doubts on its construction, and enacts, That all sales, lettings, exchanges, or dispositions of lands, buildings, or other property belonging to any parish or union not formed by the poor-law commissioners, which shall have been or shall be made for any of the said recited purposes by virtue of the said act, and of the statute amending the same passed in the 1 Vict. [c. 50] under the order of the said commissioners, by a majority of the overseers of such parish or of the last acting guardians of such union respectively, to the guardians of any union formed by the said commissioners, shall be and be taken to have been valid.

2 recites doubts on 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 69, s. 3, and enacts, That the said provisions shall be deemed to have authorized and to authorize the sale, exchange, letting, and disposal, by the guardians of a union formed or to be formed by the said commissioners of any workhouse, tenements, buildings, land, effects, or other property belonging to any parish which shall be comprised in the said union, and in cases of the sale, exchange, letting, and disposal of workhouses, tenements, buildings, land, effects, and other property belonging to a dissolved union to have applied and to apply to a majority of the persons who were the last acting guardians previous to the dissolution of such union: Provided always, that nothing in this act shall be deemed to render valid or to authorize the sale, exchange, letting, or other disposition of any property whatsoever which shall have been given or bequeathed by way of charitable donation, or shall have been allotted in right of some charitable donation or otherwise, for the poor persons of any parish, and not for the general benefit of the rate-payers, parishioners, or inhabitants of such parish, nor to dispense with the consent of the rate-payers and owners of property required by the said last recited act to all sales, exchanges, lettings, or other dispositions of property belonging to any parish, except in the case next hereinafter provided.

3. That where several parishes shall have been or shall be jointly interested in any workhouse, tenements, buildings, lands, whether of freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure, effects or other property, it shall be deemed to have been and shall be lawful for the said commissioners, upon the application of the overseers of the major part of such parishes, and with the consent of the rate-payers and owners of property in the major part of such parishes, to be ascertained in the manner directed by the said act, to order the same to be sold, let, exchanged, or disposed of by the guardians of the union in which such parishes or the greater part thereof shall be situate, in such manner, and subject to such rules, orders, and regulations, as the said commissioners shall deem fit; and it shall be deemed to have been and to be lawful for the said commissioners to direct the application of the produce arising from such sale, letting, or disposition in the same manner and to and for the same purposes as the produce arising from the sales of property belonging to other parishes may be applied to: Provided always, that where any conveyance, by way of sale, lease, exchange, disposition, or otherwise, of any property belonging to a parish or union, whether dissolved or not, shall have been or shall hereafter be made by the guardians of any existing union, or a majority of the last acting guardians of any dissolved union, under the order of the said commissioners, the same shall be deemed to have been and to be valid for all the purposes of such conveyance, although the legal estate in such property shall be or shall be presumed to be outstanding in some trustee or trustees who shall not have joined in such conveyance; and in cases of copyhold or customary lands the surrender of the tenant on the roll, being a trustee for any parish or union, shall not be required, but the admission of the party to whom the guardians or overseers shall, under the authority of the said recited acts or this act, have conveyed the same, shall take place; upon the production to the steward of the manor of which such lands shall be held of the conveyance from such guardians or overseers duly executed, and upon payment of such fines, dues, or services to the lord of the manor of which the said lands shall be holden, and his steward, as they respectively would be entitled to upon the admission of such party after a surrender by a tenant on the roll.

4. That the powers and provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 25] shall extend and apply to the payment of any debts, liabilities, or engagements which heretofore have been bona fide entered into by the parish officers or other person or persons on behalf of any parish, and which shall be proved to the poor-law commissioners to have been recognised, within one year before the passing of the said act of the fifth year of his late Majesty, as existing parish debts, liabilities, or engagements, by the inhabitants of such parish in vestry assembled, or by payment and allowance of interest thereon out of the funds applicable to the relief of the poor of such parish.

5. That it shall be lawful for the poor-law commissioners, by an order under their hands and seal, upon the receipt of a copy under the hands of the overseers of the poor of any parish of a resolution passed at a meeting of rate-payers and owners of property entitled to vote according to the provisions of the said act of the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty, duly convened and held for the purpose, after public notice of the time and place and purpose of holding such meeting shall have been given in like manner as notices of vestry meetings are published and given, consenting to the issue of such order, to direct the said overseers, by equal annual instalments, not exceeding ten, to pay or discharge, out of the poor rates, or other monies in their hands applicable in aid of the poor rates of the said parish, any such debt, liability, or engagement as aforesaid, together with all interest due or hereafter to accrue in respect of such debt, liability, or engagement; provided that the said commissioners shall be satisfied, before they issue any such order, that such debt, liability, or engagement constitutes a fair and just claim against the said parish, and shall approve of and sanction the discharge thereof.

6. That it shall be lawful for the said overseers, and they are hereby required, if so directed by such order and resolution as aforesaid, to borrow any sum that may be requisite to enable them to pay and discharge any such debt, liability, or engagement as aforesaid, or any part thereof, and to charge the poor rates of the said parish with the repayment of the sum borrowed for such purpose, and the interest thereof, so nevertheless that the sum so borrowed shall be repaid by equal annual instalments, not exceeding ten; and every instrument by which the rates shall be charged under the provisions of this act shall be approved of by the poor-law commissioners, and registered in their office.

7. And whereas various sums of money have been borrowed under the authority of an act passed in the 22 Geo. 3, [c. 83], intituled "An Act for the better Relief and Employment of the Poor," and securities authorized by that statute have been given in respect of such sums of money, and are now outstanding against the parishes on whose behalf the said sums were advanced, and the provisions of the several statutes in this behalf do not afford a satisfactory mode of liquidating such debts; be it therefore enacted, that where any parish is now or at any time hereafter shall be comprised in any union formed or to be formed under the said act of the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty, or shall be under the management of a board of guardians, and the poor rates thereof shall be liable to the payment of any debt duly borrowed and secured under the authority of the said act of the 22 Geo. 3, the guardians of such union or parish respectively shall be required to make such provision for the liquidation of the said debt in full, or by equal annual instalments, not exceeding ten, as the said commissioners shall by order under their hands and seal direct; and for such purpose such guardians are hereby empowered to make any order or orders upon the overseers of such parish as the said guardians may find necessary, and shall have all the same powers for enforcing such order or orders as they now have by law in regard to the contributions required by such guardians.

8. Provides, That nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or taken to render any debt, liability, or engagement, a valid charge upon the poor rates of any parish which is not at the time of the passing hereof a subsisting legal charge thereon, except where such resolution shall have been passed and such order shall have been made as aforesaid: and provided always, that every payment out of the poor rates, either of principal or interest, in respect of any such debt, liability, or engagement, without such order of the said commissioners, shall be unlawful, and as such disallowed in the accounts of the officer or officers or other person paying the same.

9. That every word used in this act shall, where the context shall not be at variance with such interpretation, be deemed to express the meaning assigned thereto in the said recited act of the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty; and every order, regulation, mortgage, security, charge, or other instrument made and executed under the provisions of this act shall be subject to the same incidents, exemptions, provisions, or regulations, as it would have been subject to if made under the powers contained in the said last-recited act.

CAP. XIX.

An Act to empower the Commissioners of her Majesty's Woods to form a new Opening from the Knightsbridge Road into Hyde Park, and a new Opening from High-street, Kensington, into an intended new Road across the Palace Green, and for annexing a Piece of extra-parochial Ground in the Royal Garden to the respective Parishes of Saint Mary Abbots, Kensington, and Saint Mary, Paddington, in several Portions.

[13th May, 1842.]

CAP. XX.

An Act to extend an Act passed in the fourth and fifth Years of her present Majesty, for enabling her Majesty's Commissioners of Woods to purchase certain Lands for Victoria Park.

[13th May, 1842.]

CAP. XXI.

An Act for raising the Sum of nine Millions one hundred Thousand Pounds by Exchequer Bills for the Service of the Year 1842.

[13th May, 1842.]

CAP. XXII.

An Act for consolidating the Queen's Bench, Fleet, and Marshalsea Prisons, and for regulating the Queen's Prison.

[31st May, 1842.]

Whereas the prison of the Marshalsea of the Court of Queen's Bench is a prison for debtors, and for persons confined under the sentence or charged with contempt of her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench: And whereas the Fleet prison is a prison for debtors and bankrupts, and for persons charged with contempt of her Majesty's Courts of Chancery, Exchequer, and Common Pleas: And whereas the prison of the Marshalsea of her Majesty's household is a prison for debtors, and for persons charged with contempt of her Majesty's Courts of the Marshalsea, the Court of the Queen's Palace of Westminster, and the High Court of Admiralty, and also for Admiralty prisoners under sentence of courts-martial: And whereas by an act passed in the 1 & 2 Vict. [c. 110], intitled "An Act for abolishing Arrest on Mesne Process in Civil Actions, except in certain Cases; for extending the Remedies of Creditors against the Property of Debtors; and for amending the Laws for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England," arrest on mesne process in civil actions was abolished, except in certain cases, and further provision was made for the relief of insolvent debtors, by reason whereof the prison of the Court of Queen's Bench is sufficient to contain all the persons who are now imprisoned within the said several prisons, or who will be hereafter taken in execution of process of the said several courts: Be it enacted, That after the passing of this act the prison now known as the prison of the Marshalsea of the Court of Queen's Bench shall be called the Queen's prison, and shall be the only prison for all debtors, bankrupts, or other persons who before the passing of this act might lawfully have been imprisoned in any of the said prisons of the Marshalsea of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Fleet prison, or the prison of the Marshalsea and of the Court of the Queen's Palace of Westminster; and after the passing of this act no person shall be committed from any of the said courts to the Fleet prison or prison of the Marshalsea; and that the persons imprisoned in the Queen's prison shall be there in the custody of the Marshal or Keeper of the Queen's prison, from whichever of the said courts they shall have been severally committed; and all securities taken from any officer of the Queen's Bench prison for performance of his duty respecting the prisoners now confined in the Queen's Bench prison shall enure for securing the performance of the like duty respecting the prisoners who shall be confined in the Queen's prison under this act; and all rules, orders, and enactments now in force respecting the Queen's Bench prison and the prisoners therein shall be taken to apply in all respects to all the prisoners who shall be confined in the Queen's prison, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained: Provided always, that until the removal of the persons now imprisoned in the Fleet prison and prison of the Marshalsea and of the Court of the Queen's Palace of Westminster, as hereinafter provided, such persons may be lawfully detained within the prison in which they are now severally confined, and shall be there in the same custody and subject to all the rules now in force respecting such prisoners as if this act had not been made.

2. That within one calendar month after the passing of this act the warden of the Fleet prison and the keeper of the prison of the Marshalsea and of the Court of the Queen's Palace of Westminster, shall severally certify under their hands to the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, a true list of the names of the prisoners then in their custody, with the several causes and times of their commitments; and as soon thereafter as the Queen's prison can be conveniently made ready for the reception of the prisoners to be removed under this act, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench shall issue his warrant or warrants from time to time, under his hand, severally directed to the warden of the Fleet prison and to the keeper of the prison of the Marshalsea and of the Court of the Queen's Palace of Westminster, requiring them severally to deliver into the custody of the Marshal of the Queen's prison the persons then in their custody, or such of them as shall be named in any such warrant; and upon the receipt of any such warrant the said warden and keeper shall severally deliver into the custody of the Marshal of the Queen's prison the persons named in the said warrant, with the several warrants of commitment of such persons delivered, and the Marshal of the Queen's prison shall forthwith convey the prisoners so delivered into his custody to the Queen's prison; and if any person named in any such warrant of the Lord Chief Justice shall have been lawfully discharged out of the custody of the said warden or keeper before the execution of the warrant, the said warden or keeper shall certify the fact under his hand to the said Lord Chief Justice, and shall deliver such certificate to the Marshal of the Queen's prison; and the removal of any such prisoners in obedience to the warrant of the Lord Chief Justice as aforesaid shall not be construed to be an escape.

3. That as soon as all the prisoners confined in the Fleet prison shall have been discharged, or removed under this act into the custody of the Marshal of the Queen's prison, all records, books, and papers in the custody of any officer of the Fleet prison relating to the business of the said prison shall be delivered to the Marshal of the Queen's prison, and the offices of warden of the Fleet, deputy warden, clerk of the papers, and all other offices of the Fleet prison, shall be abolished; and as soon as all the prisoners confined in the prison of the Marshalsea and of the Court of the Queen's Palace at Westminster shall have been discharged, or removed under this act into the custody of the Marshal of the Queen's prison, all records, books, and papers in the custody of any officer of the prison of the said Marshalsea and Palace Court relating to the business of the said prison shall be delivered to the Marshal of the Queen's prison, and the offices of keeper, chaplain, surgeon, and all other offices of the prison of the said Marshalsea and Palace court shall be abolished.

4. Officers whose offices are abolished may make claims for compensation.

5. Salaries now paid out of the civil list to be retained as part of the consolidation fund.

6. Discontinued prisons declared to be vested in the crown.

7. That where by any act now in force anything is provided to be done with respect to the Fleet or Marshalsea prison or the prisoners therein, or the warden or keeper of either of the said prisons, the said acts, unless so far as any such provision is repealed or altered by this act, shall continue in force, and shall be taken to apply to the Queen's prison and to the prisoners therein, and to the marshal or keeper of the Queen's prison respectively.

8. Sums payable for the relief of poor prisoners to the treasurer of the county of Surrey and chamberlain of the city of London under 53 Geo. 3, [c. 113], to be paid to the Keeper of the Queen's prison.

9. So much of 53 Geo. 3 [c. 113] as provides for the administration of the relief to prisoners in execution, and the accounting for the monies received for that purpose, repealed. Keeper of the Queen's prison to account.

10. That the Warden of the Fleet prison and Keeper of the prison of the Marshalsea and Court of the Queen's Palace of Westminster shall severally make out and deliver to the Marshal of the Queen's prison a true list of all charitable gifts and bequests heretofore made for the relief of poor prisoners or for the discharge of poor debtors in the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons respectively; and all the said gifts and bequests, and also all charitable gifts and bequests heretofore made for the relief of poor prisoners or for the discharge of poor debtors in the King's Bench prison, shall be applied, after the removal of all the prisoners in the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons, to the Queen's prison, for the relief of poor prisoners or discharge of poor debtors (as the case may be) in the Queen's prison, as well of those who but for the passing of this act would have been imprisoned in the Queen's Bench prison, as of those who but for the passing of this act would have been imprisoned in the Fleet prison or Marshalsea prison indiscriminately, according to their wants, at the discretion of the persons lawfully administering such charitable gifts and bequests respectively.

11. And whereas by an act passed in the 55 Geo. 3, [c. 50], intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Gaol and other Fees connected with the Gaols in England," it was provided, that nothing therein contained should be construed to extend to the King's Bench prison, his Majesty's prison of the Fleet, the Marshalsea and Palace Courts; be it enacted, That after the passing of this act all fees and gratuities paid or payable by any prisoners on the entrance, commitment to, continuance in, or discharge from the Queen's prison, except as hereinafter provided, shall absolutely cease, and any Marshal or Keeper or other officer of the Queen's prison who, after the passing of this act, shall exact from any prisoner any fee or gratuity for or on account of the entrance, commitment, or discharge of such prisoner, or in the name of chamber rent, or for any other purpose whatsoever, except such as shall from time to time be sanctioned by the commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, for any work and labour actually performed for the use and benefit of any prisoner, or who shall detain any prisoner in custody for non-payment of any fee, rent, or gratuity, shall be rendered incapable of holding his office, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by fine and imprisonment.

12. And whereas, owing to the former crowded state of the Queen's Bench and Fleet prisons, a practice hath prevailed of suffering prisoners to go at large within districts adjacent to the said prisons, and known by the names of "The Rules of the Queen's Bench prison," and "The Rules of the Fleet prison," on payment of certain fees, and on giving security to the marshal and warden respectively: and whereas it is expedient that such practice, and also the practice of granting day rules, be abolished; be it enacted, That after the passing of this act it shall not be lawful for the Marshal or Keeper of the Queen's prison to grant any day rule, or to grant the liberty of the rules to any person, except for the purpose of continuing the liberty of the rules of the Queen's Bench prison for such time as the marshal shall think fit, not more than twelve calendar months after the passing of this act, to those persons who shall be in the enjoyment of the liberty of the rules of the Queen's Bench or Fleet prison at the time of the passing of this act; and that all persons in the custody of the marshal or keeper to whom the liberty of the rules of one of the said prisons shall not have been granted before the passing of this act, and also those persons to whom such liberty shall have been granted before the passing of this act, after the next determination of such liberty, shall be confined within the walls of the Queen's prison, and that it shall be deemed an escape if any such prisoner be suffered to go beyond the walls of the prison, except as hereinafter provided.

13. That if the Marshal of the Queen's prison shall think fit to grant the liberty of the rules of the Queen's Bench prison to any person who at the time of the passing of this act shall be in the enjoyment of the liberty of the rules of the Fleet prison, and shall be removed into the custody of the said marshal under this act, the said marshal shall not exact any fee from such person for granting such liberty; and the securities to be entered into and executed in favour of the said marshal, for assurance that such person will not escape out of the custody of the said marshal, shall not be liable to any stamp duty.

14. That if any prisoner confined in the Queen's prison shall become or be found to be of unsound mind during his or her imprisonment, and shall be so reported by the marshal or keeper thereof to one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, it shall be lawful for such Secretary of State, by warrant under his hand directed to the said marshal or keeper, upon the certificate of two physicians or surgeons that such prisoner is of unsound mind, to order that such prisoner shall be forthwith removed to the royal hospital of Bethlehem, and the president, treasurer, and governors of Bethlehem hospital shall be bound to receive such prisoner, and him or her safely to keep, until a warrant of the Secretary of State shall be directed to them for re-delivery of such prisoner into the custody of the Marshal or Keeper of the Queen's prison as hereinafter provided, and such removal shall not be construed to be an escape; and every prisoner so removed shall remain under confinement in Bethlehem hospital until it shall be duly certified to one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, by two physicians or surgeons, that such prisoner hath become of sound mind, whereupon the Secretary of State shall issue his warrant to the president, treasurer, and governors of Bethlehem hospital, ordering that such prisoner be re-delivered into the custody of the Marshal or Keeper of the Queen's prison, for the purpose of being remanded to the Queen's prison, and neither the Marshal or Keeper of the Queen's prison, nor the president, treasurer, and governors of Bethlehem hospital, shall be answerable for any escape which such prisoner may make out of Bethlehem hospital.

15. Secretary of State may direct removal of prisoners in cases of contagious diseases or emergency.

16. That after the passing of this act the rules for the government and regulation of the Queen's prison shall be made from time to time by one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, who shall subscribe a certificate that such rules are fit to be enforced; and all rules so made shall be binding upon the marshal or keeper and other officers of the prison, and upon the prisoners confined therein; and all such rules shall be laid before parliament within six weeks after such rules shall be certified, or if parliament be not then sitting, within six weeks after the next meeting of parliament; and so much of any act as relates to the making of rules for the said prison by any court in Westminster Hall shall be repealed: Provided always, that the judges of her Majesty's Courts of Queen's Bench, Exchequer, and Common Pleas, and of her Majesty's High Courts of Chancery and Admiralty, shall have and exercise the same powers with respect to ordering the Marshal or Keeper of the Queen's prison to take into his custody any person committed by them respectively, or to bring before them respectively any prisoner in his custody, which the said judges now have with respect to the several keepers of the prisons now belonging to the said courts, or any of them.

17. That in the Queen's prison the male prisoners shall be separated from the female prisoners, so as to prevent all communication between them, and that the prisoners of each sex shall be divided into the following classes; that is to say,

1. Debtors remanded by the commissioners of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors on the ground of fraud, or for refusing to file a schedule of their property;
2. Debtors who do not maintain themselves, and are not included in the first class;
3. Debtors who do maintain themselves, and are not included in the first class;
4. Prisoners committed for libel;
5. Prisoners committed for assault;
6. Prisoners committed by Courts-martial;
7. Prisoners not included in any of the foregoing classes:

And that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State to make separate rules for each class of prisoners, and that, as far as the construction of the prison will allow thereof, the prisoners of each class shall be separated from each other, and especially the debtors from the prisoners confined for other causes than for debt.

18. That after the passing of this act no prisoner in the Queen's prison shall be allowed to send for or to have any beer, ale, victuals, or other food, or to send for, have, or use any bedding, linen, or other things, except such as shall be allowed to be brought by them respectively under such rules, to be made in the manner directed by this act, as may be reasonable and expedient to prevent extravagance and luxury, and for enforcing due order and discipline within the prison.

19. That all inquests upon the body of any person dying within the Queen's prison, or the rules of the Queen's Bench prison, shall be holden after the passing of this act before the coroner of the city of London, in like manner as any inquests holden within the borough of Southwark.

20. That the clerk of the papers of the Queen's prison shall be empowered to take the affidavits of prisoners within the said prison on any proceeding in any court of law or equity in like manner as he is now empowered to take the affidavits of prisoners in the Queen's Bench prison in any proceeding in the Court of Queen's Bench; and for taking every such affidavit the clerk of the papers shall be entitled to have a fee of 1s. and no more.

21. That so much shall be repealed of an act passed in 27 Geo. 2, [c. 17] intituled "An Act for re-vesting in the Crown the Power of appointing the Marshal of the Marshalsea of the Court of King's Bench, and for the better Regulation of that Office, and of the inferior Offices thereto belonging, and for rebuilding the King's Bench Prison," as provides that the Marshal of the Marshalsea aforesaid for the time being shall from time to time and at all times from thenceforth, at his own costs and charges, by and out of the fees and profits incident to his said office, well and sufficiently repair and keep in good repair the said prison, and all the buildings and appurtenances thereunto belonging.

22. That after the next vacancy of the office of Marshal of the Queen's prison the person having the custody of the said prison shall be called the keeper of the Queen's prison, and one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State shall appoint, and at his pleasure may remove, the keeper of the Queen's prison; and that the offices of deputy marshal and clerk of the day rules shall be abolished upon the next vacancy thereof, and that the clerk of the papers shall be thereafter empowered to act as deputy keeper in case of the illness or unavoidable absence of the marshal or keeper; and that the Secretary of State shall appoint, and at his pleasure may remove, a chaplain and surgeon for the said prison; and that the marshal or keeper, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, shall appoint and may remove the clerk of the papers and a matron, and such other officers and servants as may be necessary for the service and discipline of the prison: Provided always, that no keeper of the Queen's prison hereafter to be appointed shall enter upon his office until he shall have given good and sufficient security to the Queen's Majesty, her heirs and successors, for his good behaviour in the said office, such security to be approved by the Lord High Treasurer, or by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, and to be for such amount as he or they from time to time shall think fit.

23. That after the passing of this act the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, shall severally appoint the tipstiffs heretofore appointed by the warden of the Fleet prison to act in the Courts of Chancery, Common Pleas, and Exchequer respectively; and after the next vacancy of the office of Marshal of the Queen's prison the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench shall appoint the tipstiffs heretofore appointed by the Marshal of the Queen's Bench prison to act in the Court of Queen's Bench; and the tipstiffs so appointed shall perform the same duties and be entitled to the same emoluments respectively as the tipstiffs heretofore appointed by the said warden and marshal respectively; and nothing herein contained respecting the abolition of fees payable by prisoners shall be taken to apply to any fees payable to any of the said tipstiffs.

24. That such yearly salary as to the Lord High Treasurer or commissioners of her Majesty's treasury from time to time shall seem fit shall be paid to the marshal or keeper, clerk of the papers, chaplain, surgeon, matron, and other officers and servants of the said prison, not being more after the next vacancy of the office of marshal than 800*l.* to the keeper, and not being more after the next vacancy of the office of clerk of the papers than 400*l.* to the clerk of the papers, and not being more than 150*l.* to the chaplain, and such salaries to the surgeon, matron, and other officers and servants of the prison as are suitable for the services they will have to perform.

25. That the said salaries and annuities shall be paid free and clear of all fees, taxes, and charges whatsoever, by four equal quarterly payments, on the 5th day of January, the 5th day of April, the 5th day of July, and the 10th day of October in every year, provided that the payment to be made in each case on the first of the said quarterly days which shall happen after the accrual of the right thereunto of the person receiving the same under this act shall be a rateable proportion of a quarter's salary according to the time then elapsed since the accrual of such right; and in case of vacancy in the office of the marshal or keeper, clerk of the papers, chaplain, surgeon, matron, or any officer or servant of the prison, the person making the vacancy, his executors or administrators, shall be entitled to a proportional part of his quarterly salary, according to the time elapsed between the vacancy and the last quarterly payment.

26. Salaries and allowances to be defrayed from the Consolidated Fund.

27. Officers of the Queen's prison to be within the provisions of 4 & 5 Will. 4, [c. 24].

MEMBER RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.—The Hon. William Edward Fitzmaurice, for the county of Buckingham, in the room of Sir William Lawrence Young, Bart., deceased.

SIR JEFFREY PALMER.—After the happy restoration of Charles II. Sir Jeffrey Palmer was the first Attorney-General, and held the place to the time of his death. He was a man of great ability in the law, and in that profession was what a lawyer should be, that is, master of, and not superior to, so as to despise, the learning of his own profession; but yet his wisdom and generosity were incomparable. During all the troubles of the times he lived quiet in the Temple, a professed and known cavalier; and no temptation or fear ever shook his principles. He lived then in great business of counselling, and had no clerks but such as were strict cavaliers. One, I have heard, was so rigid, that he could never be brought to write Oliver with a great O. And, it was said, the Attorney chose to purchase the manor of Chardeton, because his master's name sounded in the style of it. Such amusements may be allowed to please and divert a zealous old gentleman that lived to see and enjoy all the fruits of his honest ambition. When he was first made Attorney-General, he had means, by the universal renewal of grants, and the floating of all manner of concerns of the Crown, which settling must pass by him, to have amassed vast wealth, as others have done and do. But he was mindful of his old friends, the cavaliers, and generally gave them their fees, and not only to such as he knew poor, for a sort of charity, but to others that had less need, out of generosity, and as a mark of his friendship and recognition of their merits. It was affirmed, that the patents granted to General Monk, passing his office, came to near 25000*l.* in fees, and for honour and gratitude he took not a penny for himself. Such instances are rare, and no wonder, for in our days, the like would fail of due applause, and be despised as a foolish weakness. It was observed, that all those persons who were in his conversation or acquaintance, as well as employment, were not only loyal, but in all other respects very worthy men, and such as adhered to him to the last hour of his life, and after he was gone, kept their integrity and resolution to the end of their own, for very few, if any, of them are yet living. He was a great lover of his profession, and took a pleasure to encourage young students, and admitted divers of them, in his Society of the Middle Temple, to have access to him at evenings, and to converse familiarly with him, and he was not only affable, but condescended to put cases, as they term it, with them.—North's Easson, p. 510.

Is another part of THE JURIST will be found the Lord Chancellor's Bill for "altering the Practice and Course of Proceeding under Commissions in the Nature of Writs de Lunatico Inquirendo," as amended by the committee in the House of Commons. There seems every reason to anticipate that this bill will pass into law, and not less reason to believe, that it will constitute a marked improvement in the practice in Lunacy.

It appears intended, as indeed is expressed indirectly by the title, not to make any alteration of the law of Lunacy. It proposes no changes in the rules which guide to an estimate of what constitutes lunacy, or in the rights, disabilities, and liabilities of lunatics; nor does it alter the practice up to the point when a commission of lunacy is obtained. All the proceedings taken for the purpose of satisfying the Lord Chancellor that there is ground for issuing a commission to inquire into the fact of lunacy, remain exactly what they were before. The alteration in the practice commences with the issue of the commission; and consists in this, that the commission or writ de lunatico, instead of being directed to commissioners specially appointed, if the case be a country case, or to the metropolitan commissioners, if the case fall within their circle, will be addressed to both, or one of two commissioners appointed under the act to be such during good behaviour. These two commissioners are not only to execute the duty of sitting as presiding judges on the inquisition, and in fact to stand in the place of the commissioners hitherto specially named, but are also, under the 3rd section, to stand in the place of the Masters in Chancery, for the purpose of inquiring and reporting to the Court on such references now usually made to the Master, as shall be ordered by the Lord Chancellor to be made to the new commissioners. The words of the clause are, "That it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to order and direct, that any of the inquiries and matters connected with the persons and estates of lunatics, usually referred to the Masters in ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, shall be referred to such commissioners, or one of them; and such commissioners shall jointly or severally have, perform, and execute all the powers, duties, and authorities relating to the said inquiries and matters so referred to them as aforesaid; now had, performed, and executed by the Masters in ordinary of the said Court of Chancery; and such other duties for the security and advantage of lunatics and their estates, as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order and direct."

The jurisdiction of the Masters is therefore not abolished, and references may still be made to them if the Lord Chancellor shall so think fit. No doubt, however, in practice, all references of ordinary matters, such as references to inquire what will be a fit and proper allowance for the lunatic, whether leases should be granted, and on what terms, whether repairs should be made, and a multitude of references on other similar objects of inquiry, all now conducted with an expense and delay wholly disproportioned to their difficulty and importance, will be made to the Commissioners in Lunacy; and it appears by the concluding sentence of the clause, that the Lord Chancellor may exercise in fact an unlimited discretion in committing to them the execution of any duties that he may consider of advantage to lunatics and their estates.

One great cause of delay and expense in the mode of proceeding in inquiries before the Master in matters of lunacy, has been, as is well known, the practice, nearly universal in all equity proceedings, of taking all the evidence in writing,—a mode of taking evidence only to be approved perhaps when it is applied to the single case of making a party give evidence against himself; and for every other purpose excessively inferior to the practice of taking evidence vivâ voce. In inquiries in lunacy as to the management of the lunatic or of his estate, the matters requiring proof are very frequently of a nature to call for the testimony of persons practising scientific professions, and whose evidence by affidavit is therefore, independently of all the other disadvantages of written evidence, peculiarly open to the disadvantage arising from the use of technical terms and professional modes of expression, tending to invest the depositions with ambiguity, when construed by persons ignorant of that particular branch of science*.

The Bill now before us does not in terms lay down any new rules as to the mode of taking evidence before the Commissioners, but under the powers given to the Lord Chancellor by the 7th section to make such orders as he shall think fit for regulating the form and mode of proceeding, it seems clear that he will have power to direct evidence to be taken viva voce; and from what fell from his Lordship in the House of Lords, in introducing this Lunacy Bill to the House, it seems most probable that one departure from the practice of the Masters' Offices will be, to hear evidence viva voce upon references to the Commissioners.

We may observe, en passant, that the concluding sentence of the 7th clause does not possess the unusual clearness and efficiency which, contra consuetudinem Parliamenti, mark the rest of this Bill. The Lord Chancellor is empowered to make orders, "provided that a copy of such orders shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after the same are made, if Parliament be then sitting, or if not, within fourteen days after the commencement of the next Session of Parliament."

If it be intended merely that the orders shall not take effect without notice to Parliament, and that the notice is to give them their validity, it is difficult to see why such a proviso should have been introduced; as the mere giving notice to Parliament seems of very little use, unless Parliament is to exercise some power of discussing the propriety of the orders. Parliament has, no doubt, a general jurisdiction to discuss and repeal Orders of Practice, as well as any other rule of any kind; but it is not the practice of Parliament to exercise such a jurisdiction over Rules of Practice, unless its sanction is made requisite by Act of Parliament. This Bill does not make the sanction of Parliament, either actual or implied, requisite to the validity of the orders, but only the fact of their being laid before Parliament; and being so laid before Parliament, no further notice, so far as this Bill prescribes, is to be taken of them. We apprehend that, practically, such a clause is a mere nullity, and leaves the power of the Lord Chancellor to make Orders wholly unfettered. Possibly that is the intention, but if so, it is not clearly expressed.

With regard to the general effect of this Bill, should

* It is very common in the courts of equity, in cases requiring the evidence of scientific persons, to see the court withhold its decision, and send the matter back to the Master or else to a court of law, (according to the mode in which it comes before the court), not because the court has any difficulty on the law, if the facts were clear; nor because the evidence when understood is of itself conflicting; but because some expressions of the scientific witnesses are ambiguous, in the absence of explanation, and there is no opportunity of explaining them. In any proceeding in which viva voce evidence was admitted, the meaning of the witness would be at once obtained by recalling him and asking him a few questions.

it pass into a law,—if we look at the indicia of fitness in the Commissioners contained in the first clause, viz. the standing in the profession required to qualify them, and the rank which not less their pecuniary remuneration than the arduous and responsible nature of their duties will give them, there can be little reason to doubt that the men of tried ability and learning must always be chosen to fill the office of commissioner. And with regard to the changes effected in the administration of the law affecting lunatics,—keeping in view the tendency of the transfer of jurisdiction of itself to produce dispatch and economy, and the almost certainty that, in conformity with the avowed object of the Bill, the Lord Chancellor will so frame the General Orders and Rules of Practice as effectively to carry out that tendency, we trust to see the administration in lunacy so changed, that the protection of the Court of Chancery shall be accessible at a cost bearing some reasonable proportion to the amount of moderate fortunes.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday, July 22.

Lord Brougham laid on the table two Bills for the Improvement of the Law of Bankruptcy, and the facilitating Arrangements between Debtor and Creditor. The present Bills did not go the length of the total abolition of imprisonment for debt, but tended greatly to reform the principle. By the first of these Bills facility was given for arrangements between debtor and creditor, and for giving increased protection to the debtor from arrest of his person. But it did not alter the general law of debtor and creditor. It proposed to enable every debtor to petition a Court of Bankruptcy, after due notice to three-fourths of the creditors in number and value, and then to submit himself to examination as to his debts, assets, &c. Any of the creditors to have liberty to oppose the debtor's discharge, but the court to have power to protect the debtor's person, for a limited or unlimited period; such protection to be withdrawn in case of fraud, or for any of the causes which would justify a remand in the Insolvent Debtors Court.

The Bill was read a first time.

The Lord Chancellor's Bankruptcy Law Amendment Bill and County Courts Bill were passed through committee, and ordered to be read a third time on Monday.

Tuesday, July 23.

The County Courts Bill was read a third time with some amendments.

Thursday, July 25.

A motion was made by Lord Campbell, "That no one be heard at the bar of the House as counsel for or against any Bill depending in the House, who is a member of the Commons House of Parliament."

After an elaborate speech by the noble and learned lord, which was met by the opposition of Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Brougham, the motion was put and negatived.

The Court of Chancery Offices Abolition Bill passed through committee and was ordered to be reported.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, July 22.

The Lunacy Bill was read a first time.

Sir J. Graham said that this and the County Courts Bill were Bills which the government were anxious to pass this session, and intended to press if no opposition were offered, and anticipating none, he thought it probable they might be passed. But if opposed, it would be impossible for government to pass them at this late period of the session.

Monday, July 25.

The Lunacy Bill went through committee pro forma, and the report was ordered to be received on Wednesday.

The further consideration of this Bill has been since postponed till Friday.

Thursday, July 28.

Mr. Mackintosh gave notice of motion in committee on the Bankruptcy Bill, for the introduction of a clause that no person beyond seventy years of age should be imprisoned by any decision under that law.

BILL IN PROGRESS.

A Bill intitled An Act to alter and amend the Practice and Course of Proceeding under Commissions in the nature of Writ De Lunatico Inquirendo.

Whereas it is expedient to alter and amend the practice and the course of proceeding under commissions in the nature of writ de lunatico inquirendo; Be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint two fit and proper persons, being respectively sergeants or barristers at law of not less than ten years' standing at the bar, to be called "The Commissioners in Lunacy;" and that in future all commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo shall be directed or addressed to such commissioners, or one of them; and that such commissioners shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, jointly and severally, have, perform and execute all the powers, duties, and authorities now had, performed and executed by commissioners named in commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo.

2. That every commissioner to be appointed by virtue of this act shall, before he shall be capable of acting in the execution of any of the powers and authorities given by this act, take the following oath; (that is to say),

"I—do swear, that I will faithfully, impartially and honestly, according to the best of my skill and knowledge, execute the several powers and trusts reposed in me as one of the commissioners in lunacy, and that without favor or affection, prejudice or malice.

"So help me God."

And that such oath shall be taken before the Lord Chancellor, in the manner as the usual oaths are administered before the Lord Chancellor to Masters in Ordinary of the said Court of Chancery.

3. That it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to order and direct that any of the inquiries and matters connected with the persons and estates of lunatics, usually referred to the Masters in Ordinary of the High Court of Chancery, shall be referred to such commissioners, or one of them; and such commissioners shall, jointly or severally, have, perform and execute all the powers, duties and authorities relating to the said inquiries and matters so to be referred to them as aforesaid, now had, performed and executed by the Masters in Ordinary of the said Court of Chancery, and such other duties for the security and advantage of lunatics and their estates as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order and direct.

4. That the said commissioners shall, by virtue of their appointments to be such commissioners as aforesaid, be and be authorized for superintending, inspecting and reporting upon, make the order and direction of the Lord Chancellor, the care and treatment of all persons found idiot, lunatic or of unsound mind by inquisition, jointly with the three visitors appointed under the authority of an act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 36], and intitled, "An Act to diminish the Inconvenience and Expense of Commissions in the nature of Writ De Lunatico Inquirendo; and to provide for the better Care and Treatment of Idiots, Lunatics and Persons of unsound Mind, found such by Inquisition;" and shall severally have, perform and execute the like powers, duties and authorities as are had, performed and executed by the one of the said visitors, being a barrister.

5. That the commissioners to be appointed by virtue of this act shall execute commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo, and shall conduct inquiries connected with lunatics or their estates, and shall perform all other duties to be committed to them by virtue of this act, either separately or together, and at such places, and within such times, and in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order and direct: Provided always, and it is hereby declared, That nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or taken to prevent the Lord Chancellor from issuing any commission in the nature of a writ de lunatico inquirendo, addressed to any fit and proper person or persons, in addition to such commissioners so to be appointed as aforesaid, if he shall, upon any occasion, deem it proper to do so.

6. That upon the death, resignation, or removal from office of any such commissioner as aforesaid, to be appointed under the authority of this act, it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to appoint a fit and proper person, qualified as aforesaid, to supply such vacancy.

7. That it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make such orders as to him shall seem fit and proper, for regulating the form and mode of proceeding before and by the said commissioners, and the practice in matters in lunacy: Provided always, That a copy of such orders shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after the same are made, if parliament be then sitting, or if not, within fourteen days after the commencement of the next session of parliament.

8. That it shall and may be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to make such order or orders as he shall deem fit, for regulating and fixing the number of jurymen who shall be sworn to try inquests on commissions in the nature of writs de lunatico inquirendo; provided that every inquisition on such commissions shall be found by the oaths of twelve men.

9. That from and after the passing of this act, such officers, clerks, and messengers in the office of the said commissioners as the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury shall determine to be necessary and proper, shall and may be from time to time appointed.

10. And whereas by an act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 111], intitled "An Act to abolish certain Sinecure Offices connected with the Court of Chancery, and to make Provision for the Lord High Chancellor on his Retirement from Office," it was enacted, that (amongst other offices) the office of the clerk of the custodies of lunatics and idiots should cease and determine after the 20th day of August, 1833; provided that nothing in that act contained should be construed to determine any of the aforesaid offices then held in possession or reversion by any person appointed thereto on before the 1st day of June, 1832, until the decease or resignation of such person: And whereas the present clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics held the said office in possession before the said 1st day of June, 1832: And whereas by an act passed in the 3 & 4 Will. 4, [c. 84], intitled, "An Act to provide for the Performance of the Duties of certain Offices connected with the Court of Chancery which have been abolished," it was enacted, that from and after the death, resignation, or removal of the person then holding the office of clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics, the duties of such office should be performed by the secretary of lunatics, in addition to such other duties as such secretary should be required to perform; and that the fees and emoluments of the said office of clerk of the custodies should be accounted for and paid into the revenue of her Majesty's Exchequer, to be carried to and made part of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland: And whereas the said office of clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics is productive of unnecessary expense to the estates of idiots, lunatics, and persons of unsound mind, found such by inquisition, and it is fit and desirable that such office and the fees thereof should be abolished as soon as can be; Be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor to order and direct, as soon as he may find it practicable so to do, having regard to the state of the funds hereinafter mentioned, that the said office of clerk of the custodies of idiots and lunatics, and the fees thereof, shall cease and determine, and that the said commissioners or the secretary of lunatics shall thenceforth do and perform any of such acts, deeds, matters and things as have heretofore been done and performed in execution of the duties of the said office of clerk of the custodies; and all such acts to be done by the said commissioners and the secretary of lunatics shall in all respects have the same force and effect as if the same had been done by the clerk of the custodies or his deputy; and that all the records, proceedings, books, papers, and documents in the said office of clerk of the custodies shall thereupon be by him delivered to such person or persons as the Lord Chancellor shall by any order appoint.

11. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor from time to time to order such fees to be received and taken by the clerks to the commissioners to be appointed under this act, and also such fees to be received and taken by the secretary of lunatics, as the Lord Chancellor shall in either case judge reasonable and proper; and that the said clerks to the commissioners and the secretary of lunatics shall and may thereafter take and receive such fees respectively, and shall pay into the Bank of England, at such times and in such manner and under such regulations as the Lord Chancellor shall from time to time order and direct, all fees or sums of money so received by them, and that the several sums when so paid in shall be placed to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, to the account intitled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account."

12. And whereas by an act passed in the 2 & 3 Will. 4, [c. 122], intituled, "An Act for making further Provision for the Lord High Chancellor of England, in lieu of Fees heretofore received by him," it is enacted, (amongst other things), that the fees and emoluments accruing due and payable as therein mentioned for business done in the offices of the clerk of the crown, the clerk of the letters patent, the secretary of fines, and the purse-bearer to the Lord Chancellor for the time being, shall be paid into the Bank of England, in the name of the Accountant-General of the said court, to an account to be intituled, "An Account of Fees formerly payable to the Lord Chancellor;" Be it enacted, That all such fees and emoluments now due, and henceforth to accrue due and payable, as in the said last-mentioned act mentioned, when paid into the Bank of England in the name of the Accountant-General of the said court, shall be placed to the account of "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," instead of the said account, intituled, "An Account of Fees formerly payable to the Lord Chancellor," and be applied as part of the fund standing to the credit of the said account, intituled, "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account."

13. That out of the said fund standing to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, intituled, "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," there shall be paid (but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and sums of money which by any act or acts now in force are authorized to be paid thereout) by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of any order or orders of the Court of Chancery to be from time to time made for that purpose, to each of the commissioners for the time being to be appointed under this act, the yearly sum or salary of 2000*l.*; such yearly sums or salaries to be payable free from all taxes, deductions and abatements whatsoever out of the same or any part thereof, and to be paid by equal quarterly payments on the 3rd day of February, the 3rd day of May, the 3rd day of August, and the 3rd day of November in every year; the first of such payments, or proportionate parts thereof, to be computed from the time of their respective appointments, to be made on such of the same days of payment as shall first happen after the dates of such appointments.

14. That the officers, clerks, and messengers who shall be appointed as hereinbefore directed, and the secretary of lunatics and his clerks, shall receive, by way of salary for the performance of their several duties, such annual sums as the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury shall from time to time fix and determine; and that the same and such allowances to the said commissioners, for their travelling and other expenses, and to the said commissioners and the secretary of lunatics for providing offices, and for the other expenses incident to the discharge of the duties of their respective offices, as the Lord Chancellor shall think reasonable, and shall from time to time order and direct, shall be paid and payable, at such times and in such manner as the Lord Chancellor shall direct, under an order of the Court of Chancery, out of the said fund intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account."

15. That it shall be lawful for the Lord Chancellor, by any order or orders to be made from time to time on a petition presented to him for that purpose, to order (if he shall so think fit) an annuity or clear yearly sum of money, not exceeding 1200*l.*, to be paid out of the said account intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," (but subject as aforesaid) to any person or persons executing the said office of a commissioner in lunacy, if and when such person or persons shall be afflicted with some permanent infirmity disabling him from the due execution of his office, and shall be desirous of resigning the same; and the annuity or yearly sum mentioned in such order or orders shall be paid by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England out of the said fund intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," (but subject as aforesaid), by equal quarterly payments, on the 3rd day of February, the 3rd day of May, the 3rd day of August, and the 3rd day of November in every year, to such person or persons, from the period when he or they shall resign his said office, for the term of his life, free from taxes, or proportionate part of the first quarterly payment of such annuity or yearly sum, calculated from the day of the resignation of such person or persons, to be made on the quarterly day of payment which shall first happen after the day of such resignation as aforesaid.

16. That it shall be lawful for any officer or person whose office or appointment may be abolished or affected by virtue of this act, and who may not be appointed to any office under this act, to make a claim for compensation, within six months after the passing of this act, to the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, who shall proceed, in such manner as they may think proper, to inquire whether any compensation ought to be made to any such claimant, and if any, what were the lawful fees and emoluments in respect of which the same should be allowed; and in every case in which such claim shall be established to the satisfaction of the Lord Chancellor, and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, they are hereby authorized and empowered to fix and determine, by an order under their hands, the amount of the annual compensation which shall seem to them to be just and reasonable for the loss sustained by such claimant, not being in any case, where his office is wholly abolished by this act, less than three-fourth parts of the full net annual value of the lawful fees and emoluments of the office so abolished; and the amount of the net annual value of the emoluments of such office shall be ascertained and fixed by the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, according to such an average of yearly receipts and disbursements, prior to the passing of this act, as they shall think proper; and the times when such annual compensations shall commence and also be payable (whether quarterly or otherwise) shall also be fixed by the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury; and all the compensations fixed and determined as aforesaid shall be issued and paid and payable by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by virtue of an order or orders for that purpose to be made by the said Court of Chancery, out of the said account intituled "The Suitors' Fee Fund Account," (but subject and without prejudice to the payment of all salaries and sums of money which by any act or acts now in force are authorized to be paid thereout): Provided nevertheless, That an account of all such compensations shall, within fourteen days next after the same shall be so granted, be laid upon the table of the House of Commons, if parliament shall be then assembled, or if parliament shall not be then assembled, then within fourteen days after the meeting of parliament then next following.

17. That in the construction of this act the words "Lord Chancellor" shall be taken to mean and include also the Lord Keeper or Lords Commissioners for the custody of the Great Seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, or other the person or persons for the time being intrusted by virtue of the Queen's sign manual with the care and commitment of the custody of the persons and estates of persons found idiot, lunatic, or of unsound mind; and that all powers hereby given to or vested in the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury by this act, may be executed by any three of such commissioners for the time being.

18. That this act may be amended or repealed by any act to be passed in this session of parliament.
